Mr. Allan Stewart: Our commitment to the funding of community care services was set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" (Cm 849). In 1993-94 the process of transferring resources from the Department of Social Security to local authorities to enable them to meet their new community care responsibilities, will begin. Already my right hon. Friend made provision in aggregate external finance of £11 million in 1991-92 and £21 million in 1992-93 in recognition of the additional costs to local authorities in implementing community care. He has also allocated £33 million to health boards over the years 1991-92 to 1994-95 by way of bridging finance to assist the movement of patients in long-stay hospitals into suitable provision within the community.

Investment (Technology)

35. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he would make a statement on investment in technology in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government believe that it is primarily industry's own responsibility to assess its markets and take the necessary investment decisions, including in technology, to ensure its successful future development. The Government's overall aim is to encourage innovation by industry without creating or perpetuating distortions in the economy. However, we do recognise that companies, particularly small and medium-sized companies, require some external assistance. One form of this assistance is intended to support precompetitive collaborative research projects. Link is an interdepartmental example of this which encourages industry to undertake joint research with higher education institutions. Another example, geared specifically to companies with less than 50 employees is the competitive small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) scheme. These examples are just two of the number of forms of assistance available throughout the United Kingdom under the banner of the enterprise initiative, operated by the Department of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

In more general terms, the principal form of investment assistance, available in Scotland under the Government's regional policy, is regional selective assistance (RSA). It is a discretionary grant available throughout the assisted areas for investment projects which involve expansion, modernisation or rationalisation and which create or safeguard jobs. In addition, the investment grant element of the regional enterprise grants (REG) scheme provides a simplified form of support for companies with less than 25 employees. Similarly, for companies with up to 50 employees, the innovation grant element of REG provides —within a ceiling of £25,000 grant per project—up to 50 per cent. support towards the costs of innovation projects which lead to the development and introduction of new products or processes.

In addition to assistance from Government, Scotland is fortunate in having the infrastructure of Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies. It is the remit of this network to further the development of Scotland's economy and its environment. This infrastructure provides the more local, and responsive, mechanism to address the various needs of industry, including stimulating investment.

Primary Schools, Testing

36. Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to abolish national testing in Scottish primary schools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall).

Electoral Registration

37. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he holds on the numbers of people who had submitted electoral registration forms in time but who were not included on the final registration; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. The decision whether or not to include an applicant on the electoral register rests entirely with the electoral registration officer for the area.

Mr. John Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many electors were registered for proxy or postal votes respectively; and how many proxy and postal votes were cast in each constituency in Scotland of the general election on 9 April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on registration of proxy and postal votes is not held centrally. The numbers of postal votes—personal and proxy together—cast in each constituency will be published in due course by HMSO as part of a post-election House of Commons Command Paper "Election Expenses".

Investment (Steel)

38. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy towards investment in new steel-making capacity in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government would welcome any proposals which might lead to the continuation of steel production in Scotland, and we would urge British Steel to give very careful consideration to any bid that may be made for the re-use of any of its Scottish production facilities.

Land Ownership

39. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representatives of Highlands and Islands Enterprise and Scottish Natural Heritage to discuss land ownership.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have at present no plans to meet either body to discuss this subject.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Lord Advocate has received from the lawyers of Pan American Airways insurers relating to the bombing of a Pan Am airliner over Lockerbie, and alleged Libyan, Syrian and Iranian involvement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Lord Advocate has not received any representations from the lawyers of Pan American World Airways or its insurers on alleged Libyan, Syrian or Iranian involvement in the bombing of Pam Am flight 103 on 21 December 1988.

Economy (North-east)

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures the Government will take to encourage economic prosperity in north-east Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The area is among the more prosperous in Scotland. Oil-related employment in particular has increased sharply in recent years. Unemployment in the Aberdeen travel-to-work area has been consistently below the Scottish average and it has had one of the lowest unemployment rates in the United Kingdom—the second lowest in the United Kingdom in March 1992.

There are, however, encouraging signs of confidence in the North sea, with fabrication and engineering yards in Scotland currently working to near full capacity. In 1991, direct offshore employment attained its second highest recorded level, 33,200 jobs, with United Kingdom nationals holding 93 per cent. of these.

Much of this is due to the Government's general economic and fiscal policies.

In addition, of course, the full range of the Government's training, employment and economic development initiatives are available in north-east Scotland through the local enterprise company network. The local enterprise companies have very substantial budgets at their disposal to encourage economic development and employment creation. Grampian Enterprise, for example, has a budget of over £20 million available this year.

Kennel Costs

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the maximum daily rate payable to procurators fiscal to keep a dog in kennels, as a production, while awaiting to hear a case in court.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am advised by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate that procurators fiscal are not paid any sum to keep a dog in kennels pending the hearing of the case in court. Where a dog has been seized in connection with an offence and the procurator fiscal decides to take criminal proceedings the cost of keeping the dog in kennels pending the trial is the responsibility of the procurator fiscal. There is no maximum daily rate payable for keeping dogs in kennels in such circumstances. Arrangements are made locally between the procurator fiscal and the local kennel for the payment of a reasonable daily fee.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by district council the amount of money spent on adaptations to the homes of disabled people in each of the last five years; and what contribution was made towards these costs from central Government funds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 May 1992]: Both district council housing departments and regional council social work departments can contribute towards the costs of adapting the homes of disabled persons. Information is not held centrally on the expenditure by district councils.

Regional council social work department expenditure on adaptations to homes of disabled people in each of the last five years, where available was as follows:

Central Government funding for local authorities is paid in support of services in general. It is for local authorities to decide the appropriate level of expenditure to incur on individual services.

Gigha

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out in a table a breakdown of the main sources of employment of the inhabitants of Gigha; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 19 May 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

Sources of employment in Gigha

	Number
Farming	14
Fish farming	5
Hotel	[1]12
Estate workers	3
Gardeners	3
Shop workers	3
Fishermen	7

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Irish Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the investigation into the consignment of Irish beef destined for Russia and found in Merseyside, indicating how much had already been bought by consumers.

Mr. Gummer: This matter is now the subject of an investigation by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. It would not be appropriate for me to comment since this could be prejudicial to the investigation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will specify on a month-by-month basis since 1985 whether the pound sterling was or would have been within (a) the 2¼ per cent. band of the exchange rate mechanism; or (b) the 6 per cent. band.

Mr. Nelson: Sterling joined the exchange rate mechanism with effect from 8 October 1990 at a central deutschmark rate of DM 2·95 and with agreed bands of fluctuation of approximately ±6 per cent.

It is not clear what sterling's exchange rate would have been since 1985 if it had joined earlier.

Currency

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the designs of £10 and £20 notes, with particular reference to the indication of their denominations.

Mr. Nelson: The design of Bank of England notes is the responsibility of the bank. It advises that each denomination is a different size, carries identifying numerals, words and colours as well as, in the new series, a distinctive bold symbol on the front of each note specifically to assist the partially sighted and the elderly.

Mortgage Difficulties

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many schemes to turn owner-occupiers experiencing mortgage difficulties into tenants or shared owners have now been established, indicating the number of families assisted in each case.

Mr. Nelson: Seven mortgage-into-rent schemes have been established through which existing borrowers can become tenants, and six of these are by the largest mortgage lenders. Lenders are also developing other rescue schemes such as shared appreciation mortgages, where the lender takes part payment of the mortgage in return for a share in the equity gains from the sale of the property.

Many separate discussions are now under way between borrowers and lenders about which arrangements are most appropriate for dealing with the difficulties raised by individual cases. It is too early to say how many families are likely to be helped by particular measures, but the Government remain keenly interested in developments.

The Chancellor, along with the Secretary of State for Environment, will meet representatives of the major lenders on 2 June to review progress.

Wine (Tax)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the level of taxation changes in each of the past 10 years on table wine (75 cl); sparkling wine (70 cl); sherry (70 cl); port (70 cl); and spirits at 40 per cent. (75 cl), showing the total percentage increase over the period as a separate table.

Sir John Cope: Changes in the level of taxation, measured as excise duty plus consequential VAT, in each of the last 10 years are as follows:

Percentages (April)

1983	5·8	5·8	5·8	5·8	5·0

Whisky

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the revenues which have accrued to the Exchequer through (a) domestic sales and (b) export sales of Scotch whisky in each of the past 10 years.

Sir John Cope: Estimated accruals of VAT and excise duty on domestic sales of United Kingdom produced whisky are shown in the table. Export sales of whisky do not yield excise or VAT revenue.

Delors Proposals

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in convenient summary form in respect of each numbered and named phase of the Delors proposals for economic and monetary union, the articles, protocol or chapter of the treaty on European union (Cm 1934), which relate to the implementation of each of the proposed phases together with the relevant page numbers in Cm 1934.

Mr. Nelson: The Delors committee report on economic and monetary union in the European Community suggested a three-stage approach to the development of EMU. The treaty on European union, as set out in Cm 1934, also adopts a three-stage approach to EMU, although this does not correspond exactly to the Delors proposals. All EMU articles in the treaty come into effect on ratification, except where later commencement is indicated in article 109e, page 25 of Cm 1934. Transitional provisions are set out in article 109e—109m, pages 25-30 of Cm 1934. Similarly, all protocols come into force on ratification, except that where their provisions relate to treaty articles which are subject to later commencement the provisions will not have effect until the later date. Thus, the protocol setting out the statute for the European Monetary Institute, pages 104-111 of Cm 1934, and the protocol on the excessive deficit procedure, page 111 of Cm 1934, will have effect on 1 January 1994. The protocol on the convergence criteria, page 112 of Cm 1934, will have effect when the Community takes decisions on the passage to the third stage of EMU as described in article 109j, pages 28-29 of Cm 1934, and the protocol on the statute for the European system of central banks and the European Central bank will have effect on the establishment of that institution, in accordance with article 109l, page 29-30 of Cm 1934.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate those functions, decisions, or statutory authority and jurisdictions, currently performed by the Bank of England, Her Majesty's Treasury or any other Department of State that could be transferred to any of the institutions of the European Community that will exist in the event of ratification of the treaty on European union assuming the future adherence of the United Kingdom to these arrangements, showing for each function the name or part of the relevant institution to which it would be transferred, together with a reference to the relevant articles, protocols, chapters, sub-articles and page numbers as found in Cm. 1934.

Mr. Nelson: No functions or decisions that are currently the responsibility of the Bank of England, Her Majesty's Treasury or any other Department for which I am responsible will be transferred to any of the Community institutions envisaged in the treaty on European union, as a result of the ratification of that treaty. The treaty confers potential competence on the Community in respect of economic and monetary union. As a result, certain responsibilities would pass to the European Central bank, if the United Kingdom were to move to stage 3 of EMU. But such changes could not take place without the approval of Parliament as is required in clause 2 of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill.

Clearing Banks

Mr. Cabora: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Banking, Insurance and Finance Union about the effects of a reduction in the number of clearing banks.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 May 1992]: My right hon. Friend received one letter from BIFU, dated 8 May.

Mr. Cabora: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in the last year about the services provided by the clearing banks.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 May 1992]: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of letters about the services provided by the clearing banks over the past year.

Public Borrowing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for the last 10 financial years the level of public debt that would accord with the definition of Government debt as defined in the Maastricht treaty protocol, showing where it differs from currently published measures of outstanding Government debt.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 May 1992]: The reference level for Government debt in the protocol to the Maastricht treaty is defined in terms of general Government gross debt (GGGD) at nominal values, measured at 31 December and expressed as a percentage of GDP at market prices for that year. Figures for 31 December are not at present available. Current estimates for 31 March of each year are shown in the table. The outturn data and projections published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" refer to net public sector debt (NPSD), and are expressed as a percentage of GDP in the year centred on end March. Compared to gross general Government debt, NPSD includes the debt of public corporations and subtracts the public sector's short-term liquid assets.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish for the last 10 financial years the level of public borrowing or repayment that would accord within the definition of budget balance as defined in the Maastricht treaty protocol; and if he will recast the 1992-93 and 1993-94 forecasts in the same manner, showing in each case how these differ from the same periods public sector borrowing requirement figures.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 13 May 1992]: The reference level set in the protocol to the Maastricht treaty was in terms of the ratio of net Government borrowing to GDP. This definition corresponds most closely with the general Government financial deficit (GGFD) in the United Kingdom national accounts, GGFD figures are given in the table. The GGFD differs from the public sector borrowing requirement in that it is measured on an accruals basis whereas the PSBR is a cash concept. The GGFD also excludes borrowing by public corporations, and does not take account of privatisation proceeds and various other financial transactions.

Trade Balance

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each month since January 1990 the revisions to the balance of trade from which the average figure of £30 million per month, referred to in his answer of 18 November 1991, Official Report, columns 26-27, was derived, giving the figures in each case.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 May 1992]: The provisional and revised figures for the visible trade balance are given together with the differences between the two. Irrespective of sign these differences average £30 million per month.

DEFENCE

Standing Naval Force Mediterranean

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the Royal Navy ship to be permanently allocated to the Standing Naval Force Mediterranean will be shore based; for how long a ship will be so allocated; and what class of Royal Navy ships will be deployed as part of this formation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of the United Kingdom's contribution to STANAVFORMED are currently being finalised. This will be at least equal to our contribution to its predecessor, the Naval On Call Force Mediterranean.

Maersk Ascension

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose, and at what cost, his Department has chartered the tanker Maersk Ascension.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The tanker Maersk Ascension is chartered to provide bulk fuel storage at Ascension Island in lieu of adequate on-shore facilities. The ship is chartered at a rate of £8,100 per day, with an additional £900 per month for crew overtime costs.

Deployments (Yugoslavia)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current and planned deployments of United Kingdom forces as part of the United Nations force in the former terrritory of Yugoslavia and the terms of their deployment; what United Kingdom (a) fixed wing, (b) helicopter and (c) naval assets have been or will be deployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 14 May at col. 174. No fixed-wing aircraft, helicopters or naval assets are involved in this deployment. The United Nations protection force deployment is taking place under the terms of the UN Security Council Resolution 721 of 27 November 1991, the UN Secretary-General's report of 15 February 1992 (S/23592) and the establishing Security Council resolution 743 of 21 February 1992.

Gulf War

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has completed its analysis of the performance of United Kingdom forces and their equipment in the Gulf War.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work is largely complete. Publication of our conclusions will need to reflect security considerations.

Royal Air Force

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the terms of reference of the study of the future logistics requirements of the RAF being undertaken by his Department; and what consultations will be held with civilian staff employed by the RAF.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the reorganisation and reduction of MOD headquarters, a new RAF logistics command will be formed by amalgamating the staff of the air member for supply and organisation and the appropriate elements of the current RAF support command, which will be abolished. The headquarters of the new logistics command will be at the current support command headquarters at RAF Brampton. The studies under way concern the detailed structure and organisation of the logistics command, and the identification of the best long-term locations for those elements of the new command not already at Brampton. Other than at Brampton, the service and civilian staff most concerned are currently located in London, and at Harrogate, High Wycombe, RAF Stanbridge and RAF Swanton Morley. The MOD trade unions were informed of the study on 19 November 1991. Since the original notification various updates have been issued to staff and the trade unions. The recommendations of this study will be subject to the full consultative procedures agreed between the Department and the trade unions.

NATO Rapid Reaction Force

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft and of what types the United Kingdom is to contribute to the NATO rapid reaction air force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom plan to make Harrier, Jaguar and Tornado aircraft available to the NATO reaction force (air). The details of aircraft numbers have yet to be confirmed.

Franco-German Defence Corps

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards a Franco-German defence corps.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State said last week, in a speech on European defence matters at Kings college, London, we believe that the Western European Union should have available to it a variety of forces and capabilities. The proposed Franco-German corps may be one of these.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: The European fighter aircraft development programme continues satisfactorily. Over 250 of the 285 equipments for EFA have now been selected. The aim is that the first prototype will fly later this year. In the meantime, industry is preparing revised quotations for the production investment and production phases of the programme against the background of a directive by the four partner Governments that costs must be reduced to the absolute minimum. Discussions with the other partner Governments are continuing. Decisions on whether to proceed to the next programme phases do not need to be taken until mid-1993.

Sea Skua and Sea Dart Missiles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment his Department has made of the performance of the Sea Skua missile during the Gulf war; and what conclusions have been reached;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the performance of the Sea Dart missile during the Gulf war; and what conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has conducted a thorough examination of all aspects of the Gulf operation, including an assessment of equipment performance.

The Sea Skua missile, carried by the Navy's Lynx helicopters, proved very effective, achieving a high success rate which included responsibility for around a quarter of Iraqi naval losses.

Our assessment of the lessons of the Falklands conflict resulted in improvements to the Sea Dart system. Sea Dart's capability was demonstrated during the Gulf conflict by its successful engagement and destruction of an Iraqi Silkworm missile in flight.

Trident

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been carried out to assess the possibility of the use of Trident as a sub-strategic nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Aitken: We are acquiring trident as a strategic system. Its capability for action on a more limited scale will, however, be taken into account in our consideration of possible options for replacement of the WE177 bomb.

Vanguard Submarines

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to place the order for a fourth Vanguard class submarine.

Mr. Aitken: We intend to place the order for a fourth Vanguard class submarine as soon as contract negotiations with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. have been satisfactorily concluded.

Defence Review

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to institute a defence review.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government have undertaken a detailed analysis of the implications for British defence policy of recent changes in the international security environment, in full consultation with our NATO allies. From this we conclude that the United Kingdom's defence commitments can be met at lower levels of forces, and have developed plans accordingly. We will continue to keep these plans, and Britain's defence policy as a whole, under review.

Military Training

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is planning to change his policy regarding the release of information on the provision of military training by British service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Anti-tank Missiles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of anti-tank guided missile systems in each British Army of the Rhine infantry battalion in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers and types of infantry battalions in BAOR since 1979 and their holdings of anti-tank guided missile systems are as follows:

Date and number and type of battalion	Systems per battalion
1979-84
13 × Mechanised	16
2 × Type A infantry	16
1984-87
11 × Mechanised	24

WE177 Bomb

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 13 May, Official Report, column 154, what estimates he has made of the total development costs for the possible vehicle of the replacement for the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Aitken: Several options are being considered for the vehicle for the WE177 replacement, and estimated development costs are different for each option. These estimates are derived from commercially confidential information provided by possible suppliers. Release at this stage could prejudice our future negotiating position with these potential suppliers.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 13 May, Official Report, column 154, how many American tactical air to surface missiles are being studied as possible replacements for the WE177 free fall nuclear bomb.

Mr. Aitken: Two. These are the short-range attack missiles-tactical (SRAM-T) and the tactical integrated rocket ramjet missile (TIRRM—a derivative of the supersonic low-level air target, or SLAT).

Middle East

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 13 May, Official Report, column 156, what estimates he has made of the ability of Iraq, Libya and Iran to present a direct threat to the United Kingdom by the end of the decade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is unlikely that Iraq, Libya and Iran will have the capability to pose a direct military threat to the United Kingdom by the year 2000. Increased proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and their delivery systems is, however, a growing concern for the security and stability of the Mediterranean and Gulf regions. The United Kingdom supports international efforts to constrain the spread of these weapons.

Defence Budget

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to change his policy regarding the release of information on the long-term costings of the defence budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I have nothing to add to my answer of 13 May 1992 at col. 155.

Helicopters

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troop-carrying helicopters were permanently assigned to each helicopter-equipped RAF air transport squadron in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not held in the form requested, and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the transport capability of No. 72 Squadron, RAF, will be reduced as a result of the reorganisation of the RAF's support helicopter fleet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Wessex helicopters operated by number 72 Squadron, RAF, based at RAF Aldergrove, are currently in the process of being reinforced by the larger Puma helicopters of 230 Squadron, which are redeploying from RAF Gutersloh. This is allowing us to reduce the numbers of older Wessex helicopters deployed in Northern Ireland, while providing a net increase in helicopter transport capability in the Province.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has concerning the number of troop-carrying helicopters permanently assigned to helicopter-equipped transport units in (a) the German armed forces, and (b) the United States armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The latest unclassified information that we have is that some 300 and 3,200 troop-carrying helicopters are actively employed by German and US armed forces respectively.

Project Costs

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 153, if he will state the nature of the circumstances in which information on the estimated expenditure on individual projects would be treated as commercially confidential to protect the commercial position of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department takes such action when the release of the information concerned could be detrimental to its (and the taxpayer's) position in contractual negotiations.

Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 153, if he will place copies of the information he has provided to the management companies at Devonport and Rosyth royal dockyards in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: The information referred to in my earlier answer is commercially confidential.

AWACS Offset Agreement

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress Boeing has made towards fulfilling its obligations under the airborne warning and communication system offset agreement.

Mr. Aitken: The terms of the AWACS offset agreement, signed in 1987, required Boeing to offer competitive bidding opportunities to British defence companies leading to contracts being placed to a level of 130 per cent. of the purchase price of the RAF's Sentry airborne early warning aircraft. To date Boeing has submitted to my Department reports listing contracts placed totalling some $2·1 billion, of which we have agreed a total of some $1·57 billion to count for offset credit. The latter figure exceeds the 130 per cent. target and Boeing has therefore met its obligation. This target has been met well within the stipulated timescale and the offset programme has so far provided major contracts for some 250 companies throughout the United Kingdom.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

UNCED

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution on science and technology will be made by his Department to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro in June; what has been the cost of preparation for UNCED by his Department, and previously at the Department of Education and Science.

Mr. Waldegrave: Preparation for UNCED is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The Office of Science and Technology, the Department of Education and Science and the research councils have helped the Department of the Environment in these preparations, but the cost of this is not readily available.

Research Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Research Council on 29 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Council of Ministers (Research) in Luxembourg on 29 April 1992.

The Council adopted the two outstanding programmes under the third EC framework programme for research and development: measurement and testing, and the dissemination and exploitation of results. It also adopted the joint research centre's programme for 1992-94. The Council had a general discussion on the future shape of Community research and development, and invited the Commission to bring forward its proposals concerning the framework programme as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Shortages

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to mitigate the effects of water shortages both on consumers and on river and wetland environments.

Mr. Maclean: Primary responsibility for maintaining public water supplies rests with the water companies. The National Rivers Authority (NRA) also has a general statutory responsibility for conserving, redistributing and augmenting water resources and securing their proper use. This responsibility extends, in particular, to protecting river and wetland environment. My Department has for some months been holding regular meetings with the NRA, the Office of Water Services and the water companies to ensure necessary liaison and that we are aware of action (such as the consideration of applications for drought orders) that will be needed by the Department.

I am writing to all Members of Parliament in the areas which may be affected by water shortages this summer to explain the situation in greater detail.

Noise Abatement Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce changes in noise abatement zone procedures.

Mr. Maclean: Following the noise review recommendation that the procedures for establishing noise abatement zones should be reviewed, my Department commissioned the Building Research Establishment to carry out a survey of local authorities which have established noise abatement zones.

Thirty-seven local authorities which have established, or attempted to establish, noise abatement zones have been consulted during this work. An interim report from BRE is due shortly.

Isle of Dogs

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the number of jobs which have been sited in the enterprise zone in the Isle of Dogs from its inception to the latest convenient date, together with the total transferred there from existing locations outside that zone, the numbers of jobs related to completely new enterprises founded in that zone and the approximate expenditure of public funds, including remissions, for each of the latter categories of job so created.

Mr. Squire: By December 1989 there were 9,600 jobs in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, an increase of 8,959 since the designation of the zone. It is not possible to state how many jobs have been transferred from outside the zone, nor how many relate to new enterprises in the zone. Consequently, public expenditure on jobs in either category cannot be estimated.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will have any responsibility to promote (a) combined heat and power stations, (b) the use of combustible waste as fuel and (c) industrial energy efficiency programmes following the abolition of the Department of Energy.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is now responsible for the work of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Energy Efficiency Office programmes relevant to industry are: the best practice programme covering research, development, demonstration and dissemination of energy technologies in the industrial, commercial and buildings sectors, including the promotion of all types of combined heat and power plant; the energy management assistance scheme (EMAS) for organisations with fewer than 500 employees; and the "Making a Corporate Commitment" campaign which is aimed at chairman and directors in industry, commerce and public sector organisations.

Primary responsibility for the use of combustible waste as fuel now rests with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Office Rents

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will institute a survey of the difference in the office rental levels available for government leasing between (a) routine property company transactions and (b) receivers or administrators thereof.

Mr. Baldry: No. It is already established practice within Government to negotiate the best available terms, including rental levels, for any new office lease requirement, regardless of who might be the landlord.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to improve protection for sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Maclean: The additional safeguards for sites of special scientific interest announced by this Government in September 1991 came into effect on 2 January 1992. Further details of the many steps we have taken to conserve our natural heritage, and how our policies on conservation are to be reflected in land use planning, are set out in a draft planning policy guidance note, which was issued for public consultation on 27 February. The response to that consultation exercise are now being considered.

Air Pollution

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives he has to reduce the impact of air pollution on health and amenity.

Mr. Maclean: These are conveniently summarised on pages 42 to 44 of the White Paper, "This Common Inheritance—the First Year Report", published in September 1991. Twenty-three separate commitments to further action are listed.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the Local Government Boundary Commission's proposal to transfer Thamesmead East ward from the London borough of Bexley to the London borough of Greenwich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Squire: Ninety-one representations from Members, local groups, members of the public and other interested persons have been received. We are considering all the points made and will make public our decision as soon as possible.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which came within 1 per cent. of the expenditure criteria he laid down for charge capping for 1992-93.

Mr. Squire: There are 126 authorities—94 charging and 32 precepting authorities—which have set budgets for 1992-93 within 1 per cent. of the limit implied by the principles which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has adopted for community charge limitation for 1992-93. These are as follows:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make a statement before the summer recess on the outline 1993-94 financial settlement for local authorities.

Mr. Redwood: Although it has been the custom to announce in July each year the Government's proposals for total standard spending and aggregate external finance, there are exceptional circumstances this year in relation to the revenue support grant settlement for 1993-94. First, in fixing these aggregates we shall want to take into account the implications for the level of council tax and for the transitional arrangements. These will in part turn on the results of the valuation of properties, which will not be available until September. Secondly, we shall want to look closely at the financing of community care. We have therefore decided to postpone an announcement of total standard spending and aggregate external finance until the autumn when our detailed proposals for the revenue support grant settlement will also be announced. I believe that it is to the advantage of local government that we should postpone these decisions this year. Similar considerations apply in Scotland and Wales and my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales will also be postponing decisions on the aggregates of the settlements for Scotland and Wales until the autumn.

Rain Forests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to prohibit the import of illegally extracted timber from tropical rain forests.

Mr. Maclean: The Government believe that restrictions or bans on tropical timber imports would be counter-productive. We are pursuing an effective policy of helping developing countries to put their forest management onto a sustainable basis.

Private Sector Forum for London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the timing and agenda for the first meeting of the private sector forum for London; and whether the forum will have its own staff and budget;

(2) if he will make a statement indicating which organisations and individuals have been invited to become members of the private sector forum for London; and what position has been given in this process to nominations from London representative organisations and to local authority representatives.

Sir George Young: We are still considering the detailed arrangements for the new private sector forum for London. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Housing Investment

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to develop further the new approach introduced last year to the allocation of resources within the local authority housing investment programme process.

Sir George Young: I intend to carry forward the new arrangements made last year with two significant new points of development. First, I propose to extend the emphasis on ensuring that the processes for allocating capital funds to local authorities are focused on the vital issue of improving the performance of authorities and getting best value from the money that is available for social housing. Secondly, in association with this and consistent with the need for a strategic approach, I intend to draw together, at a local level, both the housing investment programme (HIP) process, which applies to local authorities, and the approved development programme (ADP) process, which is used for the allocation of funds through the Housing Corporation to housing associations.

A consultation paper has today been sent to the relevant local authority associations and their members; to the National Federation of Housing Associations and the major developing associations; and to the Institute of Housing, seeking views and comments on these and other proposals to develop the local authority HIP round. The proposals involve the preparation by local authorities of comprehensive housing strategies and the way in which resources will be allocated by central Government.

The Government's overall objective is to secure the best value for money from the considerable volume of resources allocated to local authorities within the HIP process. All the proposals which we have put forward will support this aim by encouraging local authorities to be efficient and effective in their roles as landlords and enablers of social housing and in promoting better co-ordination and closer partnership at local level between authorities, housing associations and the private sector.

Last year, housing Ministers attended a number of successful presentations from local authorities, based on their housing strategies and HIP proposals. These occasions heightened the awareness and involvement of tenants and other local people in the HIP round, and pointed to the scope for partnership between local authorities, the private sector, and the Housing Corporation and housing associations in the provision of social housing. We propose to continue this initiative during the coming year, by inviting some authorities to give presentations in the course of Ministers' regular round of visits, and others to give more structured presentations in the course of the HIP round.

A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Views and comments are invited by 26 June. I intend to report back to the House shortly thereafter.

Waste

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, when the process guidance notes for the waste disposal and recycling sector processes prescribed under part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be available.

Mr. Maclean: I am pleased to report that chief inspector's guidance to inspectors are expected to be published on 27 May for 11 processes in the waste disposal and recycling sector. These notes have been drawn up following completion or research reviews; and relevant industries and other bodies have been given the opportunity to put forward their comments. The notes will provide a sound framework within which inspectors can assess applications for the authorisation of new processes and existing processes. They represent a further stage in the introduction of integrated pollution control.

A set of the notes will be placed in the Library as soon as they are published.

The preparation of guidance notes for the remaining processes to come under control is well advanced. Further notes will be published in the next few months.

Water Industry (Competition)

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has taken the necessary steps to make public the responses to consultation on the measures to promote competition in the water industry which are now incorporated in the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992.

Mr. Maclean: Copies of 45 responses to the consultation paper, "Proposed legislation on competition in the water industry", issued jointly by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office in October 1991, are available to the public in the Department of the Environment's Library until 30 September 1992. A list of the bodies which submitted these responses has been placed in the Library of the House. In a further four cases, the body submitting a response asked that it be treated as confidential and that has been respected.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future programme of large-scale voluntary transfers of local authority housing stock to housing associations.

Sir George Young: The Government are committed to a continuing programme of large-scale voluntary transfers. I will issue a consultation paper shortly setting out my proposals for the implementation of the manifesto commitment to limit the number of properties transferred in a single batch and on other possible changes to the arrangements for transfers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will also be issuing a consultation paper.

It makes sense for future applications for consent for large-scale transfers under sections 32 to 43 of the Housing Act 1985 to be considered on the basis of the new arrangements arising out of the consultation exercise. However, I am aware that a small number of authorities have already issued a formal consultation notice to the tenants in accordance with the procedure set out in schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985 or are on the point of issuing such a notice and have already incurred significant expenditure in preparing for transfer. These authorities are: East Cambridgeshire, Surrey Heath, Breckland, Woodspring and West Dorset district councils and the London boroughs of Hillingdon and Kingston upon Thames. I will be prepared to consider applications for large-scale transfers by these authorities under the existing guidelines, once they have completed consulting their tenants.

Asbestos Pollution, Armley

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will make available grants to assist home owners in the Armley area of Leeds to remove from their homes the asbestos pollution from the former Roberts factory.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 20 May 1992]: Under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, local authorities are able to give mandatory renovation grants for works to make a property fit for human habitation. This may cover asbestos removal where the presence of asbestos causes a dwelling to fail the fitness standard, for example, as a result of serious disrepair, structural instability or poor ventilation. In other circumstances, authorities may offer discretionary grants for asbestos removal where works are required to put a dwelling into reasonable repair, or in conjunction with other works.

Somerset House

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what plans he has for the future of Somerset house.

Sir George Young: None at present, I am considering how best to take forward the challenge issued last December by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for an imaginative alternative use for Somerset house.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and publish the annual report of the Serious Fraud Office for the year 1991-92.

The Attorney-General: The report was laid before Parliament at 11 o'clock this morning. I have caused a copy of the report to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many countries the Serious Fraud Office has visited in connection with the BCCI inquiry.

The Attorney-General: It is the practice of the director of the Serious Fraud Office not to divulge operational details relating to criminal investigations by the Serious Fraud Office.

TRANSPORT

A1

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the purpose of the works which have caused traffic lights and one-way operations to be set up on the A1 Haggerston, south of Berwick upon Tweed; for how long the obstructions will remain; and whether they will remain in place during weekends and English and Scottish holidays.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The traffic signals on the A1 at Haggerston south of Berwick have been introduced so that essential maintenance and improvement works to the carriageway can be undertaken. The work is programmed for completion at the beginning of August.

The traffic signals will normally remain in place at weekends, but arrangements have been made for them to be removed on Thursday 21 May for the bank holiday weekend.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for Government funding of the extension of the Jubilee line through to London docklands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 18 May.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what parameters have been given to British Rail for the definition of the route of the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. MacGregor: We attach importance to encouraging the transfer of freight from road to rail, so we have provisionally asked British Rail to allow for the new line to take freight as well as passenger services if demand warrants it.

The additional cost of extra dedicated tracks along the route for freight would be substantial and would not be justified by the anticipated demand, even on optimistic forecasts.

So we have also asked British Rail to define a route which will allow the construction of a two-track railway with a freight capability, built to continental loading gauge standards. BR would consider the potential for the addition of passing loops and other facilities.

We will confirm our view on these points after consulting the relevant local authorities and others who have an interest.

Air Fares (Northern Ireland)

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairmen of British Airways and British Midland to discuss a reduction in fares between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: No, although meetings with United Kingdom airlines are held periodically in the course of departmental business.

The evidence suggests that there is, on a fare per mile basis, quite a wide variation in fares amongst the various routes to Northern Ireland. But taken as a whole the Northern Ireland fares do not differ markedly from those on routes between regional airports in other parts of the United Kingdom.

All United Kingdom fare tariffs, including those to Northern Ireland, are filed with the Civil Aviation Authority, which has the powers to act against fares which are clearly excessive. The level they are filed at is a matter for the commercial judgment of the airline concerned.

British Rail Investment

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list British Rail's completed infrastructure investment capital and revenue, in Scotland for the financial years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and projected similar investment for each financial year until 1994-95.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail keeps only limited historic information on investment on a geographical basis, and as BR plans on a business sector basis there is no information for future years.

London, Tilbury and Southend Line

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the resignalling projects on the London Tilbury and Southend line will be completed and operational.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the new signalling is expected to be operational in 1995.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about the reliability of trains on the Fenchurch Street, Tilbury and Southend loop line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has told me that the current £50 million resignalling programme is the key to improving reliability on this line.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safeguards exist to ensure that British Rail remains able to improve rolling stock, signalling and upgrading of station facilities on the Fenchurch Street, Tilbury, Southend line pending the British Coal and British Rail (Transfer Proposals) Bill receiving Royal Assent.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to set priorities for expenditure within the funds available to it. For our part, we are doing all that we can to help it maintain its investment programme. In June 1991 an extra £400 million was provided to help British Rail maintain services and continue its investment programmes despite falling revenue. The Autumn Statement announced the addition of £1 billion to British Rail's plans for 1992.

I am pleased that British Rail has been able to begin the resignalling project on the London, Tilbury and Southend line.

M4

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about extended delays to those travelling westbound on the M4 towards London Heathrow as a result of the coning-off of lanes on the motorway on Saturday 16 and Sunday 17 May.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: One hon. Member telephoned my right hon. Friend's office and another telephoned the Department. No other representations have been received.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reduction of the westbound carriageway of the M4 at the Heston service station from three lanes to one lane on Saturday 16 and Sunday 17 May; how many people were working on the M4 at Heston; and what repairs were being carried out.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Extended delays occurred on the westbound carriageway of M4 in outer London last weekend following a local failure of the concrete carriageway on Friday 15 May. Traffic was immediately restricted to one lane to protect motorists and a 20 mph speed restriction was imposed. The centre lane was reopened temporarily for the Friday evening peak period, following emergency repairs, but was then closed again for more substantial remedial measures.

Concrete was broken out for 8 metres either side of a damaged lateral joint and was replaced by asphaltic material. The M4 westbound carriageway was fully reopened to traffic by 5.30 am on Monday 18 May. The Department's agent and contractor are to be congratulated on the speed and efficiency with which they tackled this emergency, which could not have been anticipated. The number of people working on site varied throughout the weekend depending on the operations being undertaken. At the peak, 22 engineering, supervisory and operative staff were employed. Most work was complete by midday on Sunday but time was needed for the asphalt to cool and harden before traffic could be allowed to run on it.

Commuter Trains, Kent

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his decision on British Rail's request for permission to enter into a leasing arrangement in order to fund a new fleet of commuter trains for north Kent.

Mr. Freeman: An order for the 188 Networkers necessary to complete the replacement of rolling stock for Kent link services was placed by British Rail on 10 April 1992. There is therefore no need for a leasing arrangement to fund new trains for Kent link routes.

British Rail (Policing)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for the provision and costing of policing of British Rail stations, lines and services following franchising.

Mr. Freeman: The appropriate future arrangements for policing the railways are under consideration as part of the development of our proposals for privatisation. Our proposals will be set out in more detail in a White Paper which we aim to publish later in the summer and brought forward in legislation to be introduced later this Session.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific contributions his Department made to Her Majesty's Government's submissions to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June; and what was the cost to his Department in preparing the submissions.

Mr. MacGregor: The conference will take a wide-ranging view of a variety of complex and interlinked environment and development issues. Transport has an important role to play in issues such as climate change, the protection of the atmosphere and the promotion of sustainable human settlements.

My Department has played a full part in developing the Government's policy on these issues. It is not practicable to separate out the cost of carrying out this work.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Car Service Volunteers

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual revenue to the Exchequer from the taxation of mileage allowance paid to car service volunteers with the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: Volunteers who drive for the hospital car service are taxed on motor mileage allowances only to the extent that they exceed the actual costs incurred in driving for the national health service. I regret that information is not available about the tax collected as a result of taxing this profit element.

European Community Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters in regard to financing environmental protection and restoration were discussed at the ECOFIN Council in Brussels on 19 May.

Sir John Cope: The only environmental issue raised at ECOFIN on 19 May was a brief announcement by the Commission that a draft directive proposing a carbon-energy tax would be published soon. There was no discussion.

Alcohol Taxation

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the recommendations of Her Majesty's Government to their European Community counterparts on tax harmonisation for alcohol, with particular reference to the export market for Scotch whisky; and if he will make a statement on current negotiations and the likely date for the reaching of a final conclusion.

Sir John Cope: In the 1992 Budget Statement my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer indicated that he was not prepared to accept any deal in Brussels that would force other member states to put up duties on spirits. At the 19 May 1992 ECOFIN the United Kingdom objected to the currently proposed 1,000 ecu minimum rate for spirits. No conclusion was reached, and the subject will be discussed again as part of wider discussions on indirect taxation in ECOFIN in June.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to implement a capping mechanism whereby current differentials in European Community member states on tax levied on different alcoholic beverages will, as a minimum, be retained, or as a maximum be harmonised; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: A capping mechanism would constrain the ability of member states, including the United Kingdom, to determine their own fiscal policies. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer met representatives of the spirits industry on 15 May 1992 to discuss the EC proposals. He advised them that, for this reason, he was not prepared to argue for capping. However, he assured them that he would not agree to any minimum rate which forced other member states to increase their rate of duty on spirits to the detriment of United Kingdom exports.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what particular contributions his Department made to Her Majesty's Government's submissions to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June; and what was the cost to his Department in preparing the contributions.

Sir John Cope: Submissions made to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development reflect the policies of Her Majesty's Government. A number of departments, including the Treasury, are involved in the preparations for the summit in Rio de Janeiro. The cost of the Treasury's contribution has not been separately assessed.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the public sector borrowing requirement for each financial year since 1974-75 expressed in actual pounds, constant pounds and as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 May 1992]: The table shows the figures:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with east European leaders regarding potential dangers of aging nuclear power stations in eastern Europe; and what funds will be available to promote safety at these plants.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following discussions between the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and the Czechoslovakian Foreign Minister last December, assistance has been allocated from the know-how fund for nuclear safety projects in Czechoslovakia. Similar assistance has been allocated to Bulgaria. On funding, the EC has to date allocated 18·5 mecu from its PHARE programme to Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia for technical assistance to improve nuclear safety, and further funds will be allocated to eastern European countries from the 1992 PHARE budget.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the entry clearance officer, Islamabad, will issue the entry clearance visa to Zafar Iqbal of Pakistan, fiancé of Miss Nasreen Akthar Younis of Blackburn, following the refusal of the immigration appeal tribunal on 5 February to grant leave to the entry clearance officer to appeal against the adjudicator's determination to issue the visa; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in issuing the visa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any details about this case, I have asked our high commissioner at Islamabad for a full report. I shall send the hon. Member a substantive reply as soon as possible.

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policies to control the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and conventional weapons will be put forward by the United Kingdom at the Foreign Ministers' meeting on the future co-ordination of policies towards the Commonwealth of Independent States in Lisbon on 22-23 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will continue to press all non-parties in the CIS to accede to the non-proliferation treaty and to pursue responsible policies on the transfer of conventional weapons. We have already made clear the importance we attach to signature of the 1925 Geneva protocol on the use of chemical weapons, and adherence to Australia group guidelines on the export of chemical precursors. We look forward to the conclusion at the Lisbon conference of an agreement to establish an international science and technology centre in Russia to fund and co-ordinate the peaceful employment of former Soviet military scientists.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on progress made in the multilateral negotiations on curbing arms proliferation in the middle east.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply that I gave to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on 18 May at column 11.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the freezing of the assets of Serbia and Montenegro; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's Government will take a position on individual measures in the light of the situation on the ground and in the context of discussions in the EC and in the United Nations. The EC continues to withhold from Serbia the trade and aid benefits extended to the other five republics of the former Yugoslavia. The Council has asked the Commission to report on the other possible economic sanctions.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's current policy towards (a) Croatia, (b) Serbia and (c) Montenegro in respect of the imposition of economic sanctions.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's Government will take a position on individual measures in the light of the situation on the ground and in the context of discussions in the EC and in the United Nations. The EC continues to withhold from Serbia the trade and aid benefits extended to the other five republics of the former Yugoslavia. The Council has asked the Commission to report on other possible economic sanctions.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the Government of Bosnia-Herzgeovina; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the Bosnian Foreign Minister on 7 May to discuss recent events in Bosnia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of Yugoslavia; and what subjects were discussed on that occasion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met the Yugoslav ambassador on 30 April to discuss recent developments in Yugoslavia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the representatives of the Croatian Government in London; and what subjects were discussed on that occasion.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government of Croatia have no diplomatic or consular representative in London. However, the head of the Croatian information office is in regular touch with officials.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Secretary-General of the United Nations in respect of the conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We remain in close touch with the United Nations Secretary-General through our mission to New York. We welcome the unanimous adoption of Security Council resolution 752 on 15 May and call upon all parties and others concerned in the fighting in Bosnia-Herzegovina to comply with it.

Maastricht

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates the treaty on European union signed at Maastricht on 7 February and laid before Parliament on 6 May, (a) comes into effect or (b) is ratified as respects (a) the Preamble, (b) Title I (Common Provisions), (c) Title V (Provisions on a Common Foreign and Security Policy), (d) Title VI (Provisions on Co-operation in the field of Justice and Foreign Affairs), and (e) Title VII (Final Provisions); whether the Ponsonby rule applies to (i) the whole of that treaty, (ii) certain provisions of that treaty and in the case of (ii) if he will specify which provisions.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 14 May to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing). The treaty on European union can be ratified only in its entirety; there is no procedure for ratifying different parts. Provided that Parliament has passed the necessary legislation in respect of the titles amending the Community treaties, an instrument of ratification will be deposited with the Italian Government in accordance with article R of the treaty.

Since it is a treaty signed subject to ratification, the Ponsonby rule will apply to the union treaty as a whole. The rule requires that such a treaty should not be ratified until 21 days after it has been laid before the House following signature. This requirement will have been more than fulfilled.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid and Advice

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Lord Chancellor's Department if he will state for each year between 1979-80 and 1990-91 the contributions in (a) cash terms and (b) at 1990-91 prices of those receiving (i) civil legal aid, (ii) criminal legal aid and (iii) legal advice and assistance.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figures requested are in the table. They show contributions retained in each financial year. The cash prices have been uprated to 1991 prices using the GDP deflator.

Community Charge

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Lord Chancellor's Department if he will state the number of summonses issued and number of liability orders obtained for non-payment, or arrears, of community charge for the year 1991-92 for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have arranged for this information to be made available in the Library of the House.

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current expenditure on legal aid; and what it was 10 years ago.

Mr. John M. Taylor: After the recovery of contributions, the estimated outturn of expenditure on legal aid in 1991-92 is £969 million, inclusive of administration costs. Expenditure in 1981-82 was £170 million net.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Lord Chancellor's Department what steps the Lord Chancellor takes to ensure geographical representation for the four constituent parts of the United Kingdom in the appointment of social security commissioners.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Most cases are determined on paper but commissioners sit regularly in all four regions of the United Kingdom when a particular case requires them to do so.

To ensure that only the best candidates are appointed, ability and experience, rather than regional origin, are the criteria for appointment as a social security commissioner.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Kwazulu Police Commissioner

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the visit to Britain of the Kwazulu police commissioner, General Jack Buchner.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that General Jack Buchner came to Great Britain in a private capacity in May and arranged a visit to Humberside police, which was subsequently cancelled. Her Majesty's Government were not aware of these arrangements.

South African Police

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue advice to police forces that they should not receive delegations from the South African police without consulting his Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The majority of visits to United Kingdom police forces by overseas police personnel are arranged on a Government-to-Government basis. Where this is not the case, chief officers of police are regularly reminded of the need to consult my Department and/or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office if there are likely to be political or other sensitivities.

Immigration Rules

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will propose changes to the immigration rules to accommodate the free movement provisions of the European Economic Community/ European Free Trade Association treaty.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I envisage doing so during the second half of this year. Subject to satisfactory progress towards ratification by the parties concerned, the target date for the European economic area agreement to come into force is 1 January 1993.

Wolds Private Remand Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of payment per annum the Government are giving to Group 4 for the running of the Wolds private remand prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Details of the payments to Group 4 are subject to commercial confidentiality and cannot therefore be made public.

Miscarriage of Justice Tribunal

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking in the creation of a miscarriage of justice tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Present arrangements for the consideration and investigation of alleged miscarriages of justice are being reviewed as part of the work being carried out by the Royal Commission on criminal justice. The Government will give careful consideration to the findings of the Royal Commission on all matters arising from its examination of the criminal justice system.

Firearms

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of firearms and shotguns reported stolen in the years 1986 to 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information relates to the number of notifiable offences of burglary and theft recorded by the police in which firearms, including shotguns, were reported to have been stolen. More than one weapon may have been stolen during each offence. The figures for 1986 to 1989 are contained in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1989" which is in the Library. The total figure for 1990 is 2,024. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the number of illegally held firearms and shotguns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of persons found guilty of possessing firearms or shotguns without the necessary certificate are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. In 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, 441 persons were convicted of possessing shotguns without a certificate and 383 of possessing other firearms or ammunition without a certificate.

These figures do not show the whole picture. Although only 0·2 per cent. of notifiable offences recorded in 1990 involved a firearm combating armed crime remains a top priority. My Department has commissioned a research project by Oxford university into the source of firearms used in crime. I shall consider the results carefully to see whether further measures could be taken to reduce armed crime.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearms and shotgun certificates were issued in each year between 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of applications for new firearm and shotgun certificates granted and the number of certificates renewed are shown for each year between 1986 and 1990 in tables 1 and 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin number 23/91. A copy of this bulletin is in the Library. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Asylum

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of applications for asylum in the United Kingdom in each month in 1991 and 1992 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is given in the table:

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were granted (a) asylum and (b) indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom in each year from 1981 to 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is given in the table for those granted asylum. Information on the number of persons granted indefinite leave to remain in the United Kindom, that is, the total accepted for settlement under the Immigration Act 1971, is published in table 10 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1990" (Cm 1571), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to determine asylum applications in the United Kingdom; and how many claims currently await determination.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For cases decided in the first quarter of 1992, excluding those under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules for failure to provide evidence in support of the asylum claim, the estimated average length of time between the receipt of the asylum application and the decision was 17½ months.

At 30 March 1992 around 61,000 cases awaited action in the asylum and special cases division.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees from the conflict in Yugoslavia have been given permission to stay in the United Kingdom; what assistance they are being given; and what plans he has to assist possible arrivals of further refugees from that country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is estimated that about 750 citizens of the former state of Yugoslavia have sought asylum in the United Kingdom up to the end of April this year on the basis of claims associated with the various conflicts in that area. All these applicants will be allowed to stay while their claims are considered. They, and any future applicants, are eligible to claim income support and housing benefits.

Hertfordshire (Boundaries)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Parliamentary Boundary Commission's initial proposals for Hertfordshire to be published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Boundary Commission for England has not yet decided when it will publish its provisional recommendations for the county of Hertfordshire, although it is likely that this will be towards the end of the review.

Fire Safety

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inspections the local fire brigade had made of the holiday home at Capel Curig, Snowdonia, recently subject to a fire leading to two deaths; what recommendations it had made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Gwynedd fire service inspected the Meadows outdoor centre, Capel Curig, Snowdonia on 15 March 1990. The brigade made a number of recommendations to the owners, Malborough college, Wiltshire, which dealt among other things with the means of escape in case of fire, smoke alarms, emergency lighting and general fire precautions.

Following the fire, an investigation by the brigade revealed that its fire safety requirements had not been implemented. The brigade is now preparing a full report for submission to the coroner for the purposes of the inquest.

Although the building in which the fire took place is not subject to current fire safety legislation, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 20 May 1992 at column 142 concerning proposed new regulations that will apply to most places of work. This will include holiday centres where staff are employed. The regulations are due to come into force on 1 January 1993.

Haverigg Prison

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of the funding applications currently held by his Department in respect of improvement to HMP Haverigg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Extensive improvements to HM Prison Haverigg (costing some £3·4 million) have been carried out in the last four years and the following additional work is planned during the next five years:

Re-roof officers' club
Refurbish living units
Repair cladding to weavers shop
New gas supply
Refurbish dining halls
Renew drains

The following schemes are also under consideration, but no firm starting dates have yet been allocated:

Repair pathways/roads to quarters
Provision of new staff canteen
Provision of visitors' centre
Sports hall extension

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North dated 27 January, concerning a constituent, to which the hon. Member received an interim reply on 18 March from an assistant private secretary.

Mr. Jack: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Bail

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to bring forward proposals to amend the law relating to bail.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 19 May 1992 at column 95.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had in respect of the amount of progress made by Britain towards achieving the United Nations target for overseas aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The funds allocated to aid for the developing countries is often discussed within international organisations. A number of British organisations have made specific representations. The Government have reaffirmed that while they accept the United Nations target and have made provision for aid to developing countries to increase in real terms, we are not in a position to set a timetable for achieving the target.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the total budget for the United Kingdom aid programme has been spent for each year since 1979 to date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Outturn of aid for developing countries, including aid administration, as a percentage of cash limit, has been as follows:

	Per cent.
1979-80	97·53
1980-81	99·18
1981-82	94·40
1982-83	99·10
1983-84	97·81
1984-85	97·02
1985-86	97·31
1986-87	99·95
1987-88	99·94
1988-89	99·98
1989-90	99·98
1990-91	99·74

These figures exclude non-voted attributions for the United Kingdom share of spending on aid from the European Community budget.

St. Helena and Tristan da Cunha

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice has been given to the St. Helena Government on the question of derecognition of the RMT trade union.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The decision to withdraw recognition was taken by the St. Helena Government and formally conveyed to RMT by the St. Helena Shipping Company on behalf of the St. Helena Line (a company wholly owned by the St. Helena Government), which is the immediate employer of the crew. The St. Helena Government consulted ODA and the St. Helena Shipping Company about the wording of the instruction.

PRIME MINISTER

"Our Country, the Planet"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the copy of "Our Country, the Planet" by Sonny Ramphal which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a copy of "Our Country, the Planet" by Sonny Ramphal. We are committed to ensuring the success of the Earth Summit in Rio. I was the first world leader to announce my intention of attending and I am continuing to press my colleagues to confirm their attendance. I particularly welcome the recent statement by President Bush that he will be joining us in Rio. The Government have very clearly set out their objectives for the summit. I expect to be able to agree a number of important conventions, agreements and declarations which will represent a worthwhile first step in the world's quest for sustainable development.

Earth Summit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister how many officials and Ministers are attending the Earth Summit in June; which Departments they represent; what is the estimated cost of their travel and subsistence; and if he will make it his policy for all those representing the United Kingdom to use, wherever possible, British airlines.

The Prime Minister: The information is not yet available. I will write to my hon. Friend when it is.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had from the Government of Malta about the Libyan nationals accused of the Lockerbie bombing.

The Prime Minister: We have maintained regular contacts with the Government of Malta on all aspects of the Lockerbie bombing.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 11 May, Official Report, column 21, if he will make it his policy that the representatives of Wales on the proposed European Community committee on the regions (a) include no one who has not been elected in Wales and (b) reflect the political balance within Wales.

The Prime Minister: As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) on 11 May, Ministers are considering United Kingdom membership on the Committee, including the question of how best to ensure an adequate balance of interests.

EC Rebates

Q.7. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the question of whether the Council of Ministers or any other EC institution has the power to withdraw the rebates negotiated at Fontainebleau without the agreement of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. The abatement for the United Kingdom agreed at Fontainebleau is enshrined in Community law. It cannot be amended except by unanimity, and with the approval of national Parliaments.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the sections of the Maastricht treaty which are subject to declarations or protocols concerning particular member states, and the other provisions of the treaty which do not apply to all member states, giving the names of the member states concerned in each case.

The Prime Minister: On entry into force, all the provisions of the Maastricht treaty on European union will apply to all member states, subject to relevant protocols concerning individual member states detailed below. The protocols agreed at Maastricht will become an integral part of the treaty of Rome under article 239 and will have equal legal force. Those referring to particular member states are as follows. The protocol on "the acquisition of property in Denmark" and the protocol "annexed to the Treaty of European Union and to the Treaties establishing the European Communities" relate to Denmark and Ireland respectively: the first applies to all provisions of the EC Treaties, the second to these and the provisions of the Treaty on European Union. The protocols on "Denmark", "certain provisions relating to the United Kingdom", and "certain provisions relating to Denmark" all make clear the treaty articles to which they refer. The protocols on "Portugal" and "France" are designed to preserve the interest-free credit facility afforded to the Azores and Maderia by the Banco de Portugal and France's privilege of monetary emission in its overseas territories and sole entitlement to determine the parity of the CFP franc.

Acts adopted under the protocol and social policy expressely shall not apply to the United Kingdom.

The declarations agreed by the member states and adopted at the time of signature of the treaty are not part of the treaty and do not have that legal status. Two refer to the positions of named member states, that on "monetary relations with the Republics of San Marino, the Vatican City and the Principality of Monaco" (France and Italy) and that on "the Directive of 24 November 1988 (Emissions)" (Spain and Portugal).

Environmental Guide

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister which will be the lead Department to ensure effective implementation of the Department of the Environment's publication, "Green Rights and Responsibilities: A Citizen's Guide to the Environment", issued in February.

The Prime Minister: The green rights and responsibilities guide was part of the citizens charter initiative. Similar guides were published in Wales and Scotland. The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is considering the issue of a separate version. The Department of the Environment is responsible for developing the citizens charter in relation to environmental services in consultation with interested Departments.

Privy Council

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps towards the abolition of the Privy Council.

The Prime Minister: No.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to discuss methods to enhance the control of the proliferation of nuclear weapons during his meeting with the United States Secretary of State on 22 May.

The Prime Minister: We frequently discuss prevention of nuclear proliferation with American colleagues at all levels. I shall be discussing a number of foreign and security policy issues with Mr. Baker on 22 May.

Gulf War

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 494, if he will state what representations at the highest level, and to whom, were made regarding the deaths of British soldiers in the Gulf; and which British officials made the representations.

The Prime Minister: As I indicated in my answer to the hon. Member on 12 May at column 494, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, during his visit to Washington last week, drew the attention of Mr. Cheney to a letter from the families. Throughout the last 15 months the British Government have maintained close contact with the United States Administration at all levels about this tragic incident.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to deliver a protest to the United States Administration at the decision not to require United States pilots to give evidence or be examined in respect of the deaths of British soldiers killed by friendly fire in the gulf war.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) on 19 May at columns 142-43.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will provide a list of the unpublished DTI inspectors' reports which have been given to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales but are not available to hon. Members.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: It would be inappropriate for me to discuss details of unpublished inspectors' reports. Such reports are disclosed, where appropriate, under the Companies Act 1948, as amended, under part XIV of the Companies Act 1985, as amended, and under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Accountancy Organisations (Royal Charters)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers he has to make recommendations to the Privy Council on the terms of the royal charters of the accountancy bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no express power to make such recommendations, although it would be normal for him to offer advice when consulted by the Privy Council in relation to applications from chartered accountancy bodies for changes in their royal charter.

Private Coal Mines

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state by year since 1962 the sum paid (a) in cash terms and (b) at today's values, to the former owners of private coal mines, as compensation under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946 and associated legislation.

Mr. Eggar: We have no record of any payments being made to former owners of private coal mines since 1962 in respect of compensation under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Renewable Energy Advisory Group

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the report of the Renewable Energy Advisory Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 13 May at column 138.

Trawsfynydd

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present estimated cost of complete decommissioning, including post-institutional surveillance and radioactive waste storage and disposal of Trawsfynydd nuclear power station to (a) a green field site within the reasonable short term, (b) to a green field site but deferred for 100 years or thereabouts and (c) for the various partial decommissioning options leaving the main reactor structures in situ for an indefinite period in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Responsibility for estimating the costs of decommissioning Trawsfynydd nuclear power station is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

British Coal

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the productivity of (a) the coal industry in Germany and (b) British Coal in 1990, 1991 and the current year.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

Calendar Year Productivity (kg per man hour underground)

	(a) German coal industry	(b) United Kingdom coal industry
1990	673	704
1992	n/a	[2]921

[1] The figures for 1991 and 1992 are provisional.
[2] Figures for British Coal show an increase of 16 per cent. for the first three months of 1992 over the comparable period of 1991.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the specific collieries which his Department's advisers, NM Rothschild, predict will close following privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Rothschilds have not made any predictions on specific collieries closing following privatisation of British Coal. They were asked to analyse options for privatisation and inevitably had to do this against a range of possibilities about the demand for coal.

Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his Department's policies on promoting the use of waste materials (a) as fuel in energy-from-waste incinerators and (b) in recycling after separation.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry promotes the recovery of energy and materials from waste, wherever such schemes have the potential to be economically attractive and environmentally acceptable.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the actual forecast financial contributions from industrial sources of the research, development and demonstration programmes for renewable energy run by the energy technology support unit for the years 1991 to 1998 broken down for each of the seven research programmes, biofuels, wind power, solar power, small-scale hydro, geothermal, tidal and wave power.

Mr. Eggar: Forecast external financial contributions from the renewables programme in total were £7·1 million for 1991-92 and £7·8 million for 1992-93. These totals were not broken down into individual technologies in line with the strategy published in Energy Paper 55. Targets for beyond 1992-93 will be considered as part of the current review of renewable energy strategy.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for (a) bringing forward the Renewables Order 1992 and (b) updating the guidance available for the encouragement of combined heat and power.

Mr. Eggar: I have under review the timing and policy for the next renewables order. The promotion of combined heat and power is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations with the Commission of the European Communities on extending the 1988 time limit for the application of the non-fossil fuel obligation with respect to sources of renewable electricity generation.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is in discussion about this with the European Commission.

Coal and Rail Privatisations

Mr. Macklinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what properties or services of the relevant corporations, subject to the British Coal and British Rail (Transfer Proposals) Bill, are situated or provided in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: The British Coal Corporation's statutory duties do not extend to Northern Ireland, but the corporation owns two properties and has interests in Northern Ireland in the Coal Advisory Service, the contract maintenance of solid fuel heating installations and activities associated with such installation.

I understand that British Rail has ticket offices and offices and depots related to its parcels operation, situated in Northern Ireland.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the profit or loss of the Export Credits Guarantee Department for the last 15 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: The trading results of the Export Credits Guarantee Department are reported in Trading Accounts which are laid before Parliament annually. Copies of the Trading Accounts are placed in the Library.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in rank order by individual local education authority the number of schools in each local education authority that have gained grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forman: The information requested is as follows:

		Numbers
1.	Kent	33
2.	Lincolnshire	20
3.	Essex	16
4.	Surrey	14
5.	Norfolk	12
6.	Gloucestershire	11

The table includes 217 schools that are operating as GM; 33 that have been approved but are not yet open; and five that are "minded to approve" for GM status with effect from September 1992.

Primary School Admissions

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he issues to local education authorities on the definition of a primary school deemed to be full for the purpose of refusing admissions.

Mr. Forth: All primary schools are required to comply, from September 1992, with the requirements of the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988. Under these provisions each school has a standard number, up to which it must admit each year subject to demand. Primary school standard numbers were redefined by order in May 1991. The standard number is whichever of the following is the higher:

(i) the number derived by applying a simple formula to calculate the school's capacity at 1 May 1991;
(ii) the total number on roll on 1 May 1991 divided by the number of year groups;
(iii) the number published by the LEA or the governors as the number intended to be admitted in September 1990; and
(iv) if applicable, the admission number included in any published reorganisation proposals implemented before 1 May 1991.

The formula for assessing capacity used as part of the standard number determination is set out in DES circular 6/91. A copy of the circular can be found in the Library or supplied by the Department.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances heads of local education authority primary schools may refuse to admit prospective pupils on the grounds of the pupils being outside the school's catchment area.

Mr. Forth: Primary and secondary schools must admit pupils up to their standard number for the year of entry. Where the number of pupils whose parents wish them to attend school exceeds the number of places available, places must be allocated in accordance with criteria published at the time parents express their preference. Prospective pupils must be admitted unless the schools has already admitted up to its standard number and those admitted have a better case for admission under the published criteria. Schools can have criteria for admissions which give priority to pupils living within a certain area, known as the school's catchment area. If the number of pupils admitted from the catchment area is less than the school's standard number, however, other pupils whose parents have requested places must be admitted in accordance with the school's admission criteria.

School Inspections

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will inform local education authorities of their prospective funding loss arising from charged school inspection arrangements.

Mr. Forman: The Government are considering the expenditure needs of local education authorities next year and are currently taking the views of the local authority associations on the range of factors bearing on local education authorities' spending, including the new arrangements for school inspection. Details of the local authority finance settlement for 1993-94, including education's share of total standard spending and individual authorities' standard spending assessments, will be announced in the autumn.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Refurbishing

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans exist to replace the carpets in the Palace of Westminster and in the buildings which contain hon. Members' offices; and what are the current arrangements for cleaning them by (a) electric Hoover and (b) shampoo equipment.

Mr. Beith: Carpets in the Palace of Westminster and its outbuildings are replaced on the basis of a rolling programme of planned maintenance, or whenever necessary. A new cleaning contract for the Palace and its outbuildings is being prepared. It will include among its specifications required standards for cleaning carpets.

The Serjeant at Arms includes among his responsibilities oversight of arrangements for cleaning those parts of the Palace and its outbuildings under the control of the House. Any matters of specific concern about these matters should be addressed to him.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the national importance of the listed buildings on the Woolwich arsenal site; and what plans he has for their future.

Mr. Key: Eighteen buildings on the Woolwich Arsenal site have been assessed, against the normal national criteria, as being of special architectural or historic interest and placed on the statutory list. Responsibility for those buildings lies firstly with their owner, the Ministry of Defence, which has engaged consultants to advise on future uses of the site, since it is becoming surplus to operational requirements. I understand that the MoD is also consulting closely with the Crown Estates, as owners of some of the land, the Department of the Environment's conservation unit and English Heritage over options for the future use of the site which, as far as possible, recognise the importance to the heritage of the listed buildings there.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he has any plans to visit the Woolwich arsenal site and inspect the listed buildings.

Mr. Key: No.

SCOTLAND

Electoral Register

Mr. John Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many attainers, whose 18th birthday falls during the period of the current electoral register, were eligible to vote in Scotland on 9 April; and how many of them cast their votes at the general election on that day.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of attainers in Scotland on the 1992 electoral register shown in the monitor EL 92/1 published by the Office of Population Censuses and Statistics on 2 April is 47,732. Information about how many of them were eligible to vote and actually cast their vote on 9 April is not held centrally.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the numbers of patients waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 March in England for each individual health authority (a) in total and (b) by main specialty for periods under 12 months, 12 months to 24 months and over 24 months.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information by individual health authority and specialty at 31 March 1992 is not yet available centrally.

Computer Procurement

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on measures to prevent fraud in health service computer procurement.

Mr. Sackville: Each health authority is responsible for establishing sound financial controls to safeguard its resources. Directions to this effect were issued to all health authorities within health circular HC(91)25.

The Department issued specific guidance in 1987, "Buying information technology goods and services", on good practice in NHS computer procurement. This guidance is currently being reviewed by a joint working party of the Department and the NHS supplies authority. The work should lead to the issue of revised guidance later this year.

All procurement is monitored by internal auditors, and by external statutory auditors appointed by the Audit Commission.

Copies of the current guidance are available in the Library.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1), pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 84, when she expects to have information or indications on the proportion of smokers in the United Kingdom and in each other European Community country later than the 1989 figures in the British Medical Journal;

(2) what information she receives from the European Commission on the trends in smoking in each or any parts of the European Community.

Dr. Mawhinney: Statistics on smoking prevalence in the United Kingdom are collected biennially by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in the general hospital survey and published in the following year. The 1990 figures, which showed that adult smoking had declined to 39 per cent., were published in November 1991. The 1992 figures will be available in 1993.

The European Commission does not publish regular information on trends in smoking and has not published more recent figures on the proportion of smokers in the member states of the Community than the 1989 statistics published in the British Medical Journal. We know of no plans to do so.

Young Offenders

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans to develop Red Bank secure unit for young offenders in Newton Le Willow; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I understand that negotiations are under way about a proposal for St. Helens metropolitan borough council to take over from Lancashire county council as the controlling authority for Red Bank community home. Any plans for the development of the community home —including the secure accommodation—will be a matter for the controlling authority and the trustees of the home.

Later this year, the Government will be announcing plans for the secure accommodation needed nationally to meet its obligations under the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to abolish juvenile remands. It is too early to say whether or not Red Bank will be affected.

Dentists

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to increase the number of dentists in the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: A joint Health Departments and British Dental Association review of dental manpower needs is currently in progress. It will consider the number of dentists which will be needed over the next 40 years. There are currently 27 per cent. more dentists than there were in 1979.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on performance-related pay for dentists after the proposed changes in dentists' fees.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government's position on performance pay was set out in the citizens charter in July last year. The Government are committed to extending performance-related pay within the public sector. We will be discussing this issue with the profession's representatives and submitting evidence to the Doctors and Dentists Review Body later this year. The Government have already announced that there will be a fundamental review of the dentists' remuneration system.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the number of dentists practising in the NHS in each region of England for each year since 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of dentists practising in the general dental services in each region of England for each year since 1987 is shown in the table.

Central Middlesex Hospital

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she received the report of the Mental Health Act commissioners following their inspection of the Central Middlesex hospital's mental health unit on 9 April.

Mr. Yeo: Reports by the Mental Health Act commissioners are confidential management documents, which are sent directly to local management for their consideration and further action. We have not seen the report to which the hon. Member refers.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many visits the Mental Health Act commissioners have made to the Central Middlesex hospital's mental health unit in the past 12 months.

Mr. Yeo: Three.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met the chairman of the Parkside health authority to discuss the Central Middlesex hospital's mental health unit.

Mr. Yeo: We have not met the chairman of Parkside district health authority to discuss the Central Middlesex mental health unit.

Improvement Programme, Darlington

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost improvement programme in Darlington health authority in each financial year since 1988-89.

Mr. Sackville: The figures are:

	£000s
1988-89	585
1989-90	614
1990-91	367

1990-91 was the last year for which this information was collected centrally.

Mental Health

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the members of the task force to further the development of locally based mental health services; what are their terms of reference; when they will report; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We are currently considering the membership and terms of reference of the task force.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the statistical bulletin containing data on mental illness for the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 will be published.

Mr. Yeo: A statistical bulletin "Personal Social Services: provision for people with mental illness in England 1980-90" was published in December 1991. In addition, a bulletin on "NHS Hospital Activity Statistics for England" was published in February 1992, providing information on the number of in-patients, out-patients, beds, ward attenders in the mental illness specialty up to 1990-91. "Information on NHS day care facilities", containing data on mental illness from April 1987 to March 1990 was published in September 1991. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library. More detailed figures relating to mental illness are planned for publication later this year and next year.

Buxton Chair

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the outcome of the investigation into the use of the Buxton chair to restrain patients.

Mr. Yeo: A press report earlier this year about the Buxton chair was prompted by a discussion document published by the organisation Counsel and Care on the use of restraint in residential care. Counsel and Care found no evidence of the chair being used incorrectly. Misuse should not occur in a care home where the principles underlying the Registered Homes Act 1984 have been adopted and where the guidance issued under the Act is being followed. The possibility of the inappropriate or unnecessary restraint of any resident is a matter for serious concern. This is recognised in the Act which gives registration authorities power to act against any establishment where bad care practice is found.

Cost Improvement Programmes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the cost improvement programmes for the current year for each district health authority in the Northern region; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. The regional health authority is responsible for monitoring cost improvement programmes of individual districts. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr, chairman of the Northern regional health authority, for details.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in dealing with the unforeseen consequences of the confidentiality provisions in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The Government yesterday introduced in another place a Bill to make certain specified relaxations in the restrictions on the disclosure of information by licensed clinicians imposed by section 33(5) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. The Bill has been published today.

Since the 1990 Act came into force, practical experience has shown that the restrictions were in some respects too tightly drawn and they have led to unintended risks and difficulties. The Bill therefore proposes to put matters right by making carefully limited changes in one section of the Act, which in other respects is working well. It seeks to ease the restrictions on the release of information about patients who receive infertility treatment. The circumstances in which disclosure would be permitted would be closely defined.

The Bill is solely about the disclosure of information falling within section 31(2) of the 1990 Act by a licensed person. Except in specified circumstances the patient's consent will be required before any identifying information can be disclosed.

Births, Islington

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has as to the numbers and proportions of types of childbirth occurring under the auspices of the different hospitals serving the Islington area.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Community Health Councils

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the future of community health councils.

Mr. Sackville: Community health councils (CHCs) will continue to carry out their role of representing the interests in the health service of the public in their districts. My hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State wrote to health authorities earlier this year to ensure that they were fully aware of what is expected from their relationship with CHCs. A copy of the letter (ML(92)1) is available in the Library.

HIV Infection

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many payments have been made to non-haemophiliacs infected with HIV as a result of NHS blood/tissue transfers, or to families of the deceased, following the announcement by his Department on 17 February that special provisions would be made.

Mr. Sackville: The first applications for payment were received by the Department on 12 May. Applications are being considered individually and decisions will be made as soon as possible.

WALES

Fluoride

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made in artificially increasing the fluoride content of the water supply in Wales during the most recent 12-month period for which information is available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There has been no increase in the area covered by fluoridation during the 12-month period ending 31 March 1992. Fluoridation is a matter for local determination.

Hotel Grants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has has with the chairman of the Wales tourist board concerning the number of cases agreed for staged payments from hotel proprietors and hotel companies to the board under the reclaim procedure in the last three years; what impact this will have on (a) the availability of funds for hotel grants to other applicants, (b) on jobs in the tourist industry and (c) on the annual government grant to the Wales tourist board.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The terms and conditions of grants, including the repayment arrangements, made by the Wales tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 have been approved by the Welsh Office. Individual decisions regarding the terms of repayment of grant are at the discretion of the board and each case is considered on its merits.

Provided the WTB otherwise fulfils its annual target for the repayment of loans and grants, a decision by the board to allow staged repayments would have no effect on the availability of grants to other applicants or the level of Government grant to the board.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of the grant for improvements paid in 1989-90 to the Ynyscedwyn Arms hotel, Ystradgynlais by the Wales tourist board; in what circumstances such grants are reclaimed by the Wales tourist board; and what arrangements, under what authority, have been made for staging repayment of grant by the Ynyscedwyn Arms hotel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In July 1989 the Wales tourist board approved grant under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 of £17,500 for the Ynyscedwyn Arms hotel. Only £16,592 has been taken up.

The board will normally seek full recovery of grant in cases where the relevant assets are sold within three years of the last payment of grant. Where the assets are sold between three and 10 years after the final grant payment, the board may seek only part recovery. Individual decisions regarding the terms of repayment are at the discretion of the board and each case is judged on its merits.

In this case, I understand that the hotel has not yet been sold and that the board is still in discussion with the owners about the terms of any repayment.

Trawsfynydd

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the present estimated cost of maintaining Lake Trawsfynydd in a condition sufficient to minimise future radiation exposure of people nearby, following the closure of Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Nuclear Electric owns the lake and is responsible for maintaining it to the required standards. The costs of the Government's monitoring programme will be only a small part of the total cost of maintaining the lake—and are wholly recoverable from Nuclear Electric.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to increase supplementary credit approvals for public sector housing estate management and improvement programmes; and what provision increased tenant participation will play in such initiatives.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the estate partnership programme, up to £6 million will be available in this financial year to support projects aimed at alleviating exceptional problems on local authority housing estates. I would expect successful schemes to incorporate solid arrangements for tenant participation and consultation.

Abattoirs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the livestock slaughtering industry in Wales to determine the impact on small abattoirs of the new EC standards; and if he will press for further exemption by raising the current weekly limit of 12 livestock units.

Mr. David Hunt: EC directive 91/497 has provision for derogations from some of its structural standards for abattoirs processing up to 12 livestock units per week. The directive also contains provision for similar derogations for abattoirs with a throughput of up to 20 units per week provided they fall into a limited number of specific categories and subject to the approval in each individual case of the Standing Veterinary Committee. It is expected that very few abattoirs in Great Britain would qualify for this treatment, but any applications wil be considered on their individual merits.

Council House Sales

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current levels of capital receipts from the sale of council houses held by Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest information available relates to 31 March 1991. At that date, local councils held £21·5 million of usable capital receipts from council house sales that they had not yet spent.

Youth Agency

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the full membership of the newly established Youth Agency in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The chairman and vice-chairman of the Wales Youth Agency were appointed on 1 April 1992. We expect to be able to announce the full membership of the agency's management board shortly.

Bryn Deva School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will visit the Bryn Deva county primary school, Connah's quay, Deeside, Clwyd;

(2) if he will meet the governors, parent-teacher association, and staff of the Bryn Deva county primary school, Deeside, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans at present to do so.

School Surplus Land

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidance to local education authorities that funds raised from the sale of surplus land at a school should be spent on improvements at that school.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to interfere with local education authorities' freedom to reinvest capital receipts derived from the disposal of school land as they see fit or to alter the present legal requirement that 50 per cent. of such receipts be set aside for the redemption of debt.

Llwyncelyn Centre, Swansea

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received, and on what date, for a meeting about Llwyncelyn Centre, Swansea, since his answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 121.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Community Hospital, Holywell

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of his response to the submission by Clwyd health authority for a new community hospital in Holywell, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Clwyd health authority is currently revising its approval in principle submission to reflect more closely the requirements of the mandatory health building procedures for the NHS in Wales and, in particular, to demonstrate the cost effectiveness of the preferred option and its financial viability.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of the timetable for consideration of the Clwyd health authority submission for a new community hospital in Holywell, Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the health authority which is currently finalising its approval in principle submission.

Female Family Doctors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family doctors are female in each of the health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The information which relates to 1 October 1991, is given in the table:

Family health service authority	Female
Clwyd	39
Dyfed	50
Gwent	51

Family health service authority	Female
Gwynedd	20
Mid Glamorgan	48
Powys	14
South Glamorgan	65
West Glamorgan	35

Measles and Whooping Cough

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of (a) measles and (b) whooping cough occurred in each of the health authorities in Wales in the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of notifications of (a) measles and (b) whooping cough for each of the health authorities in Wales for the last three years are shown in the table:

	(a) Notifications of measles			(b) Notifications of whooping cough
	1989	1990	[1]1991	1989	1990	[1]1991

Pension Allowances

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current guidance issued to the non-departmental public bodies in Wales concerning the criteria and prior departmental authorisation required for the payment of ex-gratia, severance, redundancy or early retirement pension allowances or bonuses for departing middle and senior management; when it was issued; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. David Hunt: The founding legislation for a non-departmental public body requires its terms and conditions, which include superannuation and early retirement compensation schemes, to be approved by the Secretary of State for Wales and the Minister for the Civil Service. Approval is arranged individually for each body.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of submissions for trust status from within Clwyd and the dates by which he expects to determine them.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Following the submission of expressions of interest last year, the three health units in Clwyd health authority are among the 14 invited to prepare applications for NHS trust status in April 1993. Decisions on whether to proceed are entirely a matter for the individual units in the light of local circumstance. In the event that applications are received, statutory public consultation will be undertaken before any decisions are reached. I would expect an announcement on the outcome of the application process to be made this autumn.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner fund-holding practices there are in each of the health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: There are 26 general practitioner fund-holding practices in Wales, including 10 in Clwyd; four each in Gwent, Mid Glamorgan and West Glamorgan; two in Dyfed; and one each in Powys and South Glamorgan.

Family Doctor Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of cash given to the family doctor service for each of the last three years.

Mr. David Hunt: Cash expended on the general medical services in Wales for the financial year 1989-90 and 1990-91 was as follows:

1989-90: £95·3 million
1990-91: £114·6 million
Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available.

School Meals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the local education authorities in Wales which provide a cooked lunchtime meal for pupils; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning his policy as to the quality and nutrition of school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally. Local education authorities are responsible for determining the content and presentation of school meals.

Improving the diets of schoolchildren is a very important part of the Government's overall commitment to raising nutritional standards.

The catering staff of each local education authority are aware of developments in dietary and nutritional research and have access to a range of expert advice. A number of authorities have introduced healthy eating options on school meals menus.

Buses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policy towards subsidy for bus routes in rural Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Local authorities determine levels of subsidy for socially necessary services in rural areas. Assistance towards certain items of capital expenditure is also available from the Department to bus operators under the rural transport innovation grant scheme.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will announce the names of the members of the Further Education Funding Council for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The following have accepted my invitation to become members of the Further Education Council for Wales:

Mrs. Penelope Ryan: Principal, Gorseinon College, West Glamorgan.
Jeff Cocks: Principal, Pontypridd Technical College, Mid Glamorgan.
Dr. Ken Thomas: recently retired from HM Inspectorate of Schools in South West England.
Dr. John Walters: Open University, Cardiff.
Mrs. Susan Stansford: Chair of Governors, Yale Sixth Form College, Clwyd.
Grant Walshe: South Wales Regional Director, Barclays Bank plc.
Huw Jones: Chief Executive, Barcud and Sain Cyf, Gwynedd.
David Margetts: Chairman, Elkay Electrical Manufacturing Ltd., Chief Executive, Powys TEC.
Richard Webster: Managing Director, Midcast Engineering (Wales) Ltd., Maesteg; Member of Mid Glamorgan TEC.
Stephen Dunster: Treasurer, West Glamorgan CC; Financial Adviser, Assembly of Welsh Counties.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to give extra money to under-funded health authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Spending on the NHS in Wales has risen from £481 million in 1979-80 to 1,946 million in 1992-93, representing an increase of 67 per cent. above inflation. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 4 February at columns 125-28 for detailed information about allocations to individual district health authorities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by region and for Great Britain as a whole, separately for males and females, how many 16 and 17-year-olds for each month since September 1991 have made applications for income support on grounds of extreme hardship; how many have been granted or refused; if he will give the information he has about the grounds on which applications were turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: No information is held as to the sex of applicants for income support under the severe hardship provision. Applications for income support from young people who are not at risk of severe hardship are unsuccessful. Such information as is available is in the tables:

Source: Severe Hardship Claims Unit Database.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for each quarter since September 1991 how many income support and unemployment benefit claimants have (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully claimed income support under the hardship rules, showing those whose claim was in doubt due to (a) not actively seeking work, (b) refusing suitable employment, and (c) availability for work.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the rules on income support whereby money due, but not yet paid to a claimant, is taken into account in assessing that benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: We have today introduced regulations to ensure that where an occupational pension scheme has suspended or reduced payments because it has insufficient funds, the amount of the then unpaid entitlement will not be taken into account as a resource. This removes a technical obstacle which might have prevented pensioners, payment of whose pension was interrupted, from claiming income support under the normal rules.

Pensions

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many weekly pensions paid by post constitute a lesser sum than the stamp used to despatch them.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. It would, however, be very exceptional for payment to be made in this way.

If the payable rate of retirement pension is £2 per week or less, payment is made once a year in arrears and usually paid by automated credit transfer. The annual payment is made shortly before Christmas by the Benefits Agency in Newcastle and includes payment of the Christmas bonus.

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to extend the industries and occupations to which claims for disablement benefit arising from vibration white finger can be made; and whether he will make a statement.

(2) when he expects the review by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council into the current terms of prescription for hand/arm vibration syndromes to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I am advised on occupational diseases by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. The council is expected to report on hand/arm vibration syndrome, which includes vibration white finger, towards the end of this year. We have no plans at present to extend current provisions for this condition.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage disability was awarded for each person granted disablement benefit as a consequence of vibration white finger during the last 12-month period for which statistics are available.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about awards of disablement benefit are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Maxwell Pension Funds

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 95, what advice he has given to the National Westminster bank in connection with the pensioners of Mirror Group Newspapers and other Maxwell Group pensioners in response to the second report of the Social Security Committee, Session 1991-92, on pension funds.

Miss Widdecombe: We have given the National Westminster bank no advice in connection with pensioners of Maxwell pension schemes.

Carpal Tunnel Syndrome

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what response he will make to the recommendations of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council regarding industrial disablement benefit for carpal tunnel syndrome.

Mr. Scott: We have received the report from the council and we are studying the recommendations.

Mrs. Pauline Bettinson

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will institute an inquiry into the handling of the mobility allowance application from Mrs. Pauline Bettinson, Lynton gardens, Lowestoft by the Benefits Agency, including delays by the agency in answering letters from the hon. Member for Waveney, the procedures for handling the claim and the request for compensation for the inconvenience caused by delays in processing of the claim.

Miss Widdecombe: Following Mrs. Bettinson's successful appeal to the medical appeals tribunal, full arrears of mobility allowance were sent to her on 23 April 1992. I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that he wrote to my hon. Friend on 15 May 1992. He has arranged for the full circumstances of Mrs. Bettinson's claim to be investigated and will write further to my hon. Friend as soon as this has been completed.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Political Settlement

13. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about progress towards a political settlement in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The current political talks recommenced on 29 April. I welcome their continuance.

Cross-Border Security

14. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security.

Mr. Mates: Cross-border security is regularly considered at meetings of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference. At the meeting on 27 April both Governments re-affirmed their determination to enhance and strengthen security co-operation.

Residents Parking

15. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to introducing a residents parking scheme for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No legal power currently exists in Northern Ireland to permit the introduction of a residents' parking scheme, but consideration is being given to the inclusion of such powers in future legislation.

Political Talks

16. Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to conclude the talks he is holding with Northern Ireland political party leaders; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The talks, which resumed on 29 April, have a three-month period available to them.

26. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress is being made in the talks involving the political parties in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Constitutional Reform

17. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he proposes to recommend any change in the constitutional position of Northern Ireland within the United Kingdom.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls).

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he proposes to recommend any changes in the constitutional position of Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain).

Terrorist Groups

18. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evidence has emerged over the last 12 months of new supplies of weapons, ammunition, or finance being provided to the Provisional IRA and other terrorist groups from foreign nations or agencies controlled by such nations; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am aware of no evidence of such supplies in the past 12 months, but a number of the atrocities committed in that period have undoubtedly involved arms and explosives supplied by the Libyans before the seizure of the Eksund in 1987.

Education (Selection)

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards selection at 11-plus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: While I will always be willing to consider carefully any scheme for reorganisation which emerges through the statutory development proposal procedures, I have no plans to require school authorities to change their current arrangements.

Electricity Privatisation

20. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the privatisation of electricity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Contracts for the sale of the four power stations formerly owned by Northern Ireland Electricity were signed on 6 March. Transfer of ownership of two of them is subject to the completion of financing arrangements which is expected shortly. The flotation of Northern Ireland Electricity plc is planned for late autumn.

DHSS Tenderers

21. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the names of firms removed from the list of selected tenders by the DHSS and subsequently restored.

Mr. Hanley: One firm was temporarily removed from the health and personal social services select list of tenderers for the market testing of support services. This firm was reinstated within the past two months and my noble Friend does not think it would be proper to disclose details of the firm concerned.

Tourism

22. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on tourism within Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Last year, 1991, was the third record year in a row for the industry, with an 18 per cent. increase in pure holiday visitors. Extra resources have been given to the Northern Ireland tourist board to promote the area as a holiday destination and improve its tourist product, and the board's corporate plan for the next three years will be published shortly. I am confident that the tourist industry can make an increasing contribution to economic development in Northern Ireland.

Urban Centres (Bombings)

23. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider taking additional measures to restore the fabric and commercial life of urban centres hit by major terrorist bombs.

Mr. Mates: The Government continue to keep under review the very extensive measures designed to restore the fabric and commercial life of urban centres hit by major terrorist bombs, but there are no plans to initiate any additional measures at this time.

Road Schemes

24. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which major road schemes are planned in the next three years for the constituency of Strangford.

Mr. Atkins: Stage 1 of the improvement of the Purdysburn road, Belfast is programmed to start in 1994-95.

Terrorism (Financing)

25. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in the past six months in tackling the financing of terrorism.

Mr. Mates: The Government attach a very high priority to cutting off sources of terrorist finance and are pressing on to implement the hard-hitting confiscation scheme contained in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991. The other financial provisions of that Act have already been brought into use.

Housing Executive

28. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take to ensure that funding levels are increased for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to a level equal to housing need.

Mr. Atkins: The total resources available to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in 1992-93 will be about £486 million. I am confident that this will be sufficient to enable the executive to continue the progress that it has made in recent years both in reducing the urgent waiting list and in improving housing conditions in Northern Ireland.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department plans to announce the outcome of the recent review of the disabled facilities grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983, grants for disabled facilities are available within the provision of the renovation grants scheme. While there has been no recent review relating specifically to the disabled facilities grant in Northern Ireland, a draft housing order will shortly be laid before Parliament which will, among other things, seek to introduce a revised renovation grants scheme for private sector dwellings. The revised scheme will, in the main, mirror the scheme that has operated in England and Wales since July 1990 under the provisions of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and will contain a specific disabled facilities grant.

Expenditure and European Community Transfers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the total public expenditure and (b) the estimated European Community transfers in Northern Ireland in each of the latest five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mates: The total expenditure within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for the past five complete financial years was as follows:

Year	£ million
1988-89	5,436
1989-90	5,724
1991-92	6,449

Northern Ireland's largest single source of European Community funding is the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. The bulk of such receipts are disbursed centrally by the Intervention Board Executive Agency—IBEA—and details on a regional basis are not available. The following amounts, however, have been identified as receipts from the three structural funds:

Year	£ million
1988-89	96
1989-90	95
1990-91	110

Note: Figures for 1991-92 are, in both cases, provisional.

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will respond to the proposals by the Northern Ireland milk marketing board to reform the board; when he will table the new legislation; and if he will make a statement about the future of the Northern Ireland milk marketing board.

Mr. Hanley: In common with its Great Britain counterparts, the milk marketing board for Northern Ireland has submitted its proposals for reform to the Government. These proposals are currently being considered.

The Government intend to introduce legislation this Session to facilitate the transformation of the milk marketing boards into non-statutory organisations to bring benefits to both producers and consumers.

EMPLOYMENT

Expenditure

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will show for Great Britain how much expenditure, excluding administration costs, at cash and constant prices, has been spent in each year since 1987-88 on (a) employment training and the earlier programmes it replaced, (b) youth training and the earlier YTS, (c) enterprise allowance scheme, (d) job clubs and (e) restart courses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table shows expenditure for Great Britain at cash and constant 1991-92 prices, excluding administration costs, on each year since 1987-88, on (a) employment training, (b) youth training, (c) enterprise allowance scheme, (d) job clubs and (e) restart.

	Employment training[4]		YT[3,4]		Enterprise allowance scheme[4]		Jobclubs[5]		Restart courses[5]

[2] The 1991-92 figure includes costs for YT and credits.
[3] YT figures do not include cost for community industry.
[4] Figures include the associated marketing and evaluation and research costs for each programme.
[5] Inclusive of VAT where appropriate.

Notes:
1. The figures relate to total expenditure on externally provided job clubs and the staff costs associated with those run by the employment service.
2. Restart courses, all of which are run by outside providers, were introduced in the 1986-87 financial year. It is not possible to identify separately the restart element of the programme prior to 1988-89. The figures for 1987-88 are the best estimate of restart course expenditure in those years.
3. Constant prices were calculated by the use of GDP deflator index from the Chancellors "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published in March 1992.

Training, Darlington

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of employment training and youth training places were available in Darlington for each financial year from 1988-89; and what number will be available during 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

At 29 March 1992, there were approximately 3,400 people on employment training and approximately 4,400 people on youth training in the Durham training and enterprise council area, of which Darlington is a part.

Trade Union Commissioner

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of running the office of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members in the 1991-92 financial year and the amount of money spent on publicity for this office in 1991-92; and how many cases were (a) taken up by the office, (b) taken to court by the office and (c) won in court by trade union members supported by the office in 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the total cost of running the office of the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members in the 1991-92 financial year was £289,701. Of this, £12,749 was spent on publicity. I also understand that during this period the commissioner granted assistance to 14 applications; that court proceedings were brought in six of these cases; and that all six cases resulted in orders from the court in favour of the assisted persons.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will publish a table showing the proportions of (a) men and (b) women broken down by ethnic origin who are working as (i) full-time employees, (ii) part-time employees and (iii) self-employed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available estimates are given in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if a vaccine now exists which can guarantee complete immunity against rabies.

Mr. Soames: Modern vaccines are effective. However, no vaccine can guarantee complete immunity in all animals.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the European Commission to publish its proposals on the harmonisation of rabies prevention measures in the EC.

Mr. Soames: We expect a proposal shortly.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the rabies orders currently in force in the United Kingdom; and what assessment he has made of how effective they have been in preventing the outbreak of rabies over the last 20 years.

Mr. Soames: Our present rabies orders have been very effective in preventing any outbreak of rabies outside quarantine and provide us with the means to control an outbreak should one occur. They reflect the Government's determination to maintain this country's freedom from rabies.

Bee Disease

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available to bee-keepers supplies of products for the suitable treatment of bees infected with the parasite varroa jacobsonni.

Mr. Curry: Supplies of a suitable product are already available from my Ministry to bee-keepers with colonies in which the presence of the varroa jacobsoni mite has been confirmed and where immediate treatment is considered necessary.

Pesticides

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken by his Department into the use of the pesticides atrazine and simazine; and if he will make a statement on their use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The agricultural use of atrazine and simazine is monitored through the studies carried out by the MAFF Pesticide Usage Survey Group. Recent reports show that in England and Wales approximately 41 tonnes of atrazine are used per year, primarily on maize. The major uses of simazine are on beans, peas and in orchards where approximately 140 tonnes are used annually. In addition there are major non-agricultural uses of both atrazine and simazine.

Abattoirs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the new EC abattoir standard regulation on the United Kingdom slaughtering industry; if he will make a statement on the exemption proposed for the United Kingdom; and what are the exemptions applicable in each of the other EC countries.

Mr. Soames: The EC abattoir standard is set out in an EC directive (91/497/EEC) on the hygiene and marketing of fresh meat which will be implemented in the United Kingdom by the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 the draft of which has recently been circulated for consultation. Over half of British meat is already produced in abattoirs approved as meeting the EC standard. We anticipate there will be no shortage of slaughtering capacity in Great Britain after 1992 although some rationalisation of the industry is inevitable.

There are no exemptions in the directive for slaughtering operations. "Low-capacity" slaughterhouses processing up to 12 livestock units per week are subject to less onerous rules on structure and layout of premises, although they must comply with the hygiene requirements. There are also provisions for the EC's Standing Veterinary Committee to approve the extension of the "low throughput" rules to slaughterhouses processing between 12 and 20 livestock units per week provided certain criteria are met. We anticipate that very few premises in Great Britain will meet the criteria laid down but any applications received will be considered on a case by case basis.

A separate directive (91/498/EEC) provides for additional time to be granted to businesses unable to meet all of the EC requirements on structure and layout of premises by 1 January 1993. A large number of operators have applied to take advantage of this provision for temporary derogations whilst they upgrade their premises.

Any applications from other member states for extending the "low throughput" rules must be authorised by the Standing Veterinary Committee so we shall be aware of them in due course. Commission inspectors will monitor applications of the directive in all member states. If there is any substantive evidence that any member state is not applying the rules correctly, the Government will raise the matter with the Commission.

Consumers Committees

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numbers of consumers committees in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and the number of (a) paid staff and (b) volunteers who work for them.

Mr. Soames: Full details of the United Kingdom's consumer committees are available in the HMSO publication "Public Bodies 1991" (ISBN 0-11-430064-X) including their membership and, where appropriate, their remuneration.

Food and Farming Festival

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution his Department made to the national festival for food and farming held in Hyde park in May; what was the cost of his Department's contribution; and what environmental matters were taken into account in preparing and establishing the contribution.

Mr. Curry: MAFF took part in the ASDA festival of food and farming as part of its overall exhibition programme for 1992-93, the cost of which is met from within the Department's paid publicity budget for the year. The various elements of the Hyde park exhibit were designed for this year's exhibitions programme as a whole which will take in other major venues. One section was devoted to environmental issues and was designed especially to encourage understanding of environmental matters.

BNFL

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure that British Nuclear Fuels plc makes a full statement about the findings of recent monitoring of the coastline in west Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have sought and received assurance from British Nuclear Fuels plc that it will continue to release full information on this matter as it becomes available. The Government's own monitoring programme confirms there is no threat to the public.

Swine Influenza

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of recorded cases of pigs with swine influenza caused by virus strain type HI 195852 by region.

Mr. Soames: Although the Department is aware of a recent apparent increase in the incidence of respiratory disease in pigs, swine influenza is not a notifiable disease, so comprehensive data are not maintained.

DEFENCE

Interdisciplinary Research Centres

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has any plans (a) to renew its funding of the interdisciplinary research centre on semiconductor materials which ended in March and (b) to fund any other interdisciplinary research centres.

Mr. Aitken: The answers are (a) yes, and (b) no.

Research

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 11 polytechnics and 43 universities referred to in his answers to the hon. Member for Brent, East on 20 January, Official Report, column 16 and to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 12 February 1985, Official Report, column 141 at which his Department has funded research in the last three years.

Mr. Aitken: I will place a list of the bodies concerned in the Library of the House.

Chemical and Biological Warfare

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location of all facilities shared by Britain with any other countries in the field of chemical and biological warfare; and what is the nature of their work.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No facilities are shared with any nation for chemical and biological warfare or defence. The United Kingdom abandoned all offensive chemical and biological weapons in the late 1950s. Since then the United Kingdom has been wholly concerned with chemical and biological defence, ie the provision of effective protective measures for the United Kingdom armed forces.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are on the Chemical and Biological Defence Board of the Defence Scientific Advisory Council referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 11 December 1991, Official Report, column 476; how many on the Chemical and Biological Defence Board are from universities and polytechnics; and what are the occupations and backgrounds of the others on the board.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Chemical and Biological Defence Board comprises up to 22 members, including 12 independent members from industry, universities and institutions of higher education, and 10 official members from the civil service and the armed forces. The current strength is nine independent members—five from universities and four from the private sector—and 10 official members—six service officers, of whom four are medically qualified, plus four senior scientific civil servants from various Government Departments.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year Britain stopped producing chemical and biological weapons; for what reasons this decision was taken; which committees within the Ministry of Defence and the Cabinet Office were involved in making the decision; and whether the papers are openly available to be seen in the Public Records Office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Britain stopped producing biological weapons in 1943 and chemical weapons in 1945. Biological weapon production, which was very limited, ended when the required stockpile had been achieved. Production of chemical weapons ceased because there was a sufficient stockpile, including captured German stocks. The United Kingdom unilaterally abandoned all offensive chemical and biological weapons over 30 years ago in the late 1950s and since then our role has been to ensure that the United Kingdom armed forces are effectively protected against chemical and biological weapons. Relevant papers are not available in the Public Records Office.

The rest of the question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the names of the general defence agreements in which information in the field of chemical and biological defence is passed between Britain, the United States of America and other allies; and when each of these agreements was signed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are a number of agreements with NATO allies covering research, development, deployment and standardisation of chemical and biological defence equipment. The following international agreements include chemical and biological defence in their scope:

a. The United Kingdom-United States-Canada memorandum of understanding on chemical and biological (CB) defence which addresses research, development, production and procurement of chemical and biological defence equipment. This was signed in 1980 and has been an extremely effective means of ensuring close collaboration between the three countries.

b. NATO army armaments group (NAAG) panel VII on nuclear, biological and chemical (NBC) defence and its sub-panels and working groups are the main NATO fora. CB defence is also discussed by other NATO panels and by the NATO defence research group.

c. The United Kingdom-United States-Canada-Australia American, British and Canadian Armies (ABCA) agreement between the Armies of the four countries. This includes a group known as the Quadrupartite Working Group (QWG) which has a panel on NBC defence.

d. The United Kingdom-United States-Canada-Australia air standardisation co-ordinating committee agreement which also has a sub-group addressing CB defence.

e. The United Kingdom-United States navies have an information exchange agreement which includes NBC defence in its scope.

f. The technical co-operation programme which involves the United Kingdom, United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand is concerned with collaboration in defence research and has a sub-group that is active on CB defence.

g. The Anglo-French defence research group allows the exchange of information and collaboration on research for CB defence.

h. The Anglo-Netherlands-Norwegian collaboration project exchange of information and collaboration on research for CB defence.

i. FINABEL, an army-army agreement covering CB defence information exchange between Britain, France, Italy, Netherlands, Germany, Spain and Belgium.

Suicides

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff in his Department's research and development establishments have committed suicide since 1985; and if he will list them according to the date and the establishment where each was working.

Mr. Aitken: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Genetic Engineering

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts and agreements currently exist between his Department and universities and other institutions of higher education for the research related to genetic engineering referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 30 June 1988, Official Report, column 313.

Mr. Aitken: One, sponsored by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Forces Welfare Funds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to increase the level of British forces welfare funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The funding and resources made available for the wide variety of activities grouped together under the general term of "welfare" are kept under continual review.

Research Projects

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a list of Ministry of Defence research projects in universities and polytechnics which are unclassified.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our practice to give details of individual research contracts.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many research projects in British universities and polytechnics have been funded since December 1985 through the United States strategic defence initiative programme; what has been the total value of these projects; and how many universities and polytechnics in Britain have received funding through the strategic defence initiative programme since December 1985;

(2) how many research projects in British universities and polytechnics are currently being funded under the United States strategic defence initiative programme; what is the total value of these projects; and how many British universities and polytechnics are currently receiving funding for research from the strategic defence initiative programme.

Mr. Aitken: Since the signing of the memorandum of understanding on SDI between the United States and the United Kingdom, we understand that some 41 such contracts worth over $10·7 million in total have been awarded by the United States, benefiting 23 United Kingdom academic institutions. Nineteen of these contracts are still current, valued at approximately $6·4 million. Thirteen universities and polytechnics are involved in this current research work.

Porton Down

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many scientific papers the staff of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down have published in open scientific journals and literature in each year since 1985.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) under its framework document. Therefore, I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Monoclonal Antibodies

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts and agreements currently exist between his Department and universities and other institutions of higher education for research related to the production or application of monoclonal antibodies, referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 30 June 1988, Official Report, column 314.

Mr. Aitken: Two, sponsored by the Defence Research Agency.

Careers Liaison Officers

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff from the Atomic Weapons Establishment have been appointed careers liaison officers to universities or polytechnics in the last three years; and which universities or polytechnics have been involved.

Mr. Aitken: The MOD nominates suitable members of staff to act as recruitment liaison officers with universities and polytechnics on its behalf. Over the last three years nine staff serving at AWE have been so nominated.

Private Anthony Evans

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the investigation into the case of Private Anthony Evans lately of the Royal Regiment of Wales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ex-Private Evan's allegations of racial abuse by members of his battalion have been investigated by the special investigations branch of the Royal Military Police and subsequently by a board of inquiry.

The findings of the board of inquiry will next be considered by the Army Board.

Playgroups

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual grant to pre-school playgroups for children of service families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no direct MOD grant to individual pre-school playgroups for children of service families. The Ministry of Defence does fund a number of posts within the Pre-School Playgroups Association to provide co-ordination of the support to the PPA network of fieldworkers in British Forces Germany, and general support and guidance to playgroups in other overseas commands. This co-ordination ensures appropriate training and development of fieldworkers to promote good practice in pre-school playgroups in service locations. The grant made available to the PPA in the current financial year is £116,000.

Submarines

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects tenders to be invited for the ordering of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines.

Mr. Aitken: Studies into the design of a batch 2 Trafalgar class are in progress. Subject to the outcome, we expect to invite tenders for design and build of the first submarine during the course of next year.

Collaborative Projects

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the collaborative projects on military equipment currently being undertaken by the United Kingdom and other countries in the Western European Union.

Mr. Aitken: The following is a list of collaborative projects currently being undertaken by the United Kingdom and at least one other country which is a member of the Western European Union:

Collaborative project	Country(s)

Army Cadet Force

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army Cadet Force units are operating in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: 216.

Naval Craft

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which (a) Leander class frigates and (b) Ton class minehunters are currently in service in the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Navy currently has six Leander class frigates, Andromeda, Argonaut, Hermione, Juno, Scylla and Sirius, and six ton class minehunters, Brinton, Iveston, Kellington, Nurton, Sheraton and Wilton.

Ministerial Visit, Washington

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) matters discussed and (b) decisions taken, during his meeting with his United States counterpart on his recent visit to Washington.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence discussed a wide variety of issues of mutual interest with Mr. Cheney during his visit to Washington.

UNCED

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what particular contributions his Department has made to the United Kingdom submissions to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June; and what has been the cost of his Department's input.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In common with other Government Departments, the Ministry of Defence has been consulted on preparatory work for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development but has not been required to make any particular contributions.

Arms Fairs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the arms and military equipment fairs in which his Department has participated since 1 April 1991; what has been the cost of participation in each respective fair; and what financial or logistical support has been given by his Department to United Kingdom arms and military equipment manufacturers to attend these fairs.

Mr. Aitken: In the period from 1 April 1991, the Defence Export Services Organisation exhibited at the following arms and military equipment exhibitions:

Exhibition	Extra cost to MOD £
DCEE Birmingham	10,000
Paris Airshow	200,000
Dubai International	18,000
LIMA, Malaysia	7,000
Defence Seoul	6,000
AIDEX, Canberra	18,000
Asian Aerospace, Singapore	8,000
Defence Services Asia, Malaysia	6,000

In addition the Royal Navy equipment exhibition was held in September 1991. All extra costs incurred in this exhibition were recovered from participating companies.

No financial or logistical support was given by MOD to United Kingdom arms and military equipment manufacturers to enable them to attend these exhibitions.

REME Workshops, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the letter of 29 April from the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby, respecting the future of No. 42 command workshops, REME in West Derby, Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 20 May 1992.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the listed buildings, and their grading, on the Woolwich arsenal site, with the estimated costs of refurbishment.

Mr. Aitken: The listed buildings at the Royal Arsenal site together with the gradings are as follows:

	Gradings
1. The Brass Foundry (in DOE ownership)	I
2. Verbruggens House	II
3. The Main Guard House	II
4. Dial Arch Block	II
5. Riverside Guard Rooms (2 No.)	II
6. Royal Laboratory Pavilions	II
7. Old Military Academy	*II
8. Officers Block	II
9. Grand Store complex (4 No.)	II
10. Shell Foundry Gatehouse	II
11. Middle Gate House (part only)	II
12. Royal Carriage Factory	II
13. Armstrong Gun Factory	II
14. New Laboratory Square	II

Preliminary estimates of the cost of refurbishing those buildings in MOD ownership to a reasonable standard is likely to be in the order of £12 million.

Army Air Corps

Mr. Home Roberston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent to date on works at Dishforth to accommodate the Army Air Corps; what plans he has for Army Air Corps deployment at Dishforth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, some £39 million has been spent on works to accommodate the Army Air Corps at Dishforth.

Under the plans for restructuring the Army announced in "Britain's Army for the 90s" (Cm 1595) an Army Air Corps Regiment will continue to be based at Dishforth.

Household Division

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the review of the performance of public ceremonial duties in London by the Household Division.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Public duties are not exempt from the reduction in the size of the Army, and we will seek to reduce the manpower bill for such duties wherever it is sensible and practical to do so. There is no question of putting security or major ceremonial occasions at risk.

Ark Royal

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the bombing of the Ark Royal aircraft carrier by a Royal Navy Sea Harrier during a training exercise on 20 April; what will be the cost of repair to the ship; and what steps have been taken to avoid a repeat of such an accident.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During a routine training exercise on 20 April a small practice bomb, released by a Sea Harrier aircraft, struck and penetrated the flight deck of HMS Ark Royal. The exercise involved the practice bombing of a surface target which was being towed some 500 yards astern of Ark Royal.

There were six casualties who suffered injuries, mainly burns; damage to the ship was minor. Immediate repairs were carried out allowing the ship to proceed with its task; further repairs are being undertaken during the ship's current stay in Portsmouth. The cost of these repairs is around £60,000.

A board of inquiry was convened and its final report is awaited. The board of inquiry will make recommendations on any action which it considers necessary; in the interim, as a prudent precaution, all Royal Navy Sea Harrier practice bomb attacks against towed targets have been suspended.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Twyford Down

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he has any plans to visit Twyford down, Hampshire;

(2) what visits the Minister for Roads and Traffic has paid to Twyford down, Hampshire since 9 April; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Twyford down, Association to discuss the M3 Bar End-Compton.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I visited the Winchester area on 5 May to see the route of the Bar End Compton section of the M3. My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit the area or to meet representatives of the Twyford Down Association.

M3

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the meetings which have taken place between officials of the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission to discuss the M3 Bar End-Compton during May 1992; and whether he will make a statement on the outcome.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Discussions between officials of the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission were held on 7 May for the purpose of clarifying the issues raised in the Commission's article 169 letter of 17 October 1991 and the United Kingdom Government's reply of 17 December 1991. As the Commission is still considering this response I cannot comment further at the present.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what communications have been received by Her Majesty's Government from the European Commission, since 9 April, regarding the M3 Bar End-Compton; and whether he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: None.

Toxic Paints (Vessels)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations his Department has made to the International Maritime Organisation to encourage the phasing out of the use of toxic paints on vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom gave full support to the action taken by the International Maritime Organisation, in IMO resolution MEPC 46(30) dated 16 November 1990, to restrict the use of toxic antifouling paints and encourage the development of environmentally safe substitutes.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce whether the proposed channel tunnel rail link will be optimised for passengers and freight or passengers only; and whether it will be two or four track.

Mr. Freeman: I refer to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) yesterday at column 199.

M1-M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, columns 35-36, if he will list the scales of each plan, map and diagram made available at the public exhibitions relating to the proposed M1-M62 motorways link; and if he will place a copy of each in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Plans, maps and diagrams were made available at the following scales: 1:100,000, 1:50,000, 1:17,500, 1:10,000 and 1:2,500.

The single existing copy of the exhibition material and supporting plans is too bulky to be placed in the Library. The hon. Member may inspect these documents at our offices in Leeds.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid and Advice

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement about the current level of legal aid.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the level of legal aid provided in the financial year 1991-92 is to be published in the legal aid annual report which will be laid before Parliament on 22 June. A copy will be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Children Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many emergency protection orders were taken out during the first six months of the operation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information available indicates that 800 emergency protection orders were made by courts in England and Wales in the period 14 October 1991 to 31 March 1992, following the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many place of safety orders were taken out during the first six months immediately prior to the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested. Between 1 January and 30 June 1991, which is the most recent information available, some 1,980 places of safety orders were made in England and Wales.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many child assessment orders were taken out during the first six months of the operation of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information available indicates that 22 child assessment orders were made by courts in England and Wales in the period 14 October 1991 to 31 March 1992, following the implementation of the Children Act 1989 on 14 October 1991.

EDUCATION

Law College Courses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to cover law college one-year post-graduate courses under the mandatory award notice for local educational authority financial grant support.

Mr. Forman: The Education Act 1962 restricts local education authorities to making mandatory awards in respect of attendance only on certain designated full-time courses up to first degree level and on designated initial teacher training courses. The Act permits authorities to make discretionary awards for other courses, subject to certain exclusions. Where postgraduate law courses are eligible for discretionary awards, the decision whether or not to make such an award is a matter for the authority. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Undergraduates

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of full-time undergraduate students fail to complete their courses, by institution, for each of the United Kingdom's universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Forman: Details of non-completion of higher education courses can be found in:

(a) University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the UK, published by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Universities Funding Council, and

(b) DFE Statistical Bulletin "Leaving rates among First Year Students in English Polytechnics and Colleges", to be published in June.

Publication (a) is in the Library; publication (b) will be placed in the Library and a copy sent to the hon. Member.

School Transport

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce provisions to ensure formal checks on the suitability of drivers and escorts involved in transporting children to and from school.

Mr. Forth: Local authorities already have the power to carry out police checks on drivers and escorts where they consider them necessary. The Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health and the Home Office, issued guidance on the circumstances in which police checks should be undertaken in its circular 12/88. A copy is in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Debt

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments were received by the United Kingdom Government and United Kingdom Government agencies on official bilateral debt, from the countries defined by the World Bank as severely indebted low income countries in 1990 and 1991; and what payments are estimated to be made by those countries in 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for official bilateral debt repayments to the ODA, Commonwealth Development Corporation (CDC) and ECGD are given in the tables.

It is important to consider these figures in context. Significant outflows of aid to the severely indebted low income countries (SILICs) continue to overshadow debt repayments made to the ODA. The net transfer of finance from CDC to the SILICs is also positive over the period in question.

The figure given below for payments to ECGD in 1992 may well, of course, be higher than the amount actually paid. In particular, no attempt has been made to estimate the impact of future Paris Club agreements on Trinidad terms. Agreement to begin implementing the Prime Minister's Trinidad terms initiative to relieve the burden of debt on the poorest countries was achieved in December. Five countries have already benefited from the terms, and we expect more to do so, including some of those defined as SILICs, over the coming months. As these new agreements take effect, we can expect a significant reduction in repayments due to ECGD.

(a) Loan repayments from SILICs to the ODA (£)

Received 1990-91	Received 1991-92	Expected 1992-93
3,067,664	3,067,664	785,530

Figures for payments received by and due to the ODA are recorded on a financial year basis.

(b) Loan repayments from SILICs to the CDC (£)

Received 1990	Received 1991	Expected 1992
33,902,000	28,071,000	33,138,235

Figures show the CDC's total receipts from the SILICs, whether from the private or public sector.

(b) Repayments from SILICs to the ECGD (£)

Received 1990	Received 1991	Due 1992
251,000,000	275,000,000	509,000,000

Figures shown for 1990 and 1991 are in respect of officially guaranteed debt rescheduled through the Paris club. The figure for 1992 shows payments due on the same rescheduled debt, not including arrears which were outstanding as of 31 December 1991.

Notes:

Those countries currently defined as severely indebted low income countries (SILICs) by the World Bank are Burundi, Egypt, Equatorial Guinea, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Honduras, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritania, Mozambique, Myanmar, Niger, Nigeria, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Somalia, Sudan, Tanzania, Uganda, Zaire and Zambia.

Joint Funding Scheme

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will be completing his review of the joint funding scheme, including the block grant element; and if he will make a statement on the completion of his review.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have recently completed our review of ODA co-operation with non-governmental organisations including the joint funding scheme. We have subsequently reviewed the block grant element in the scheme. These reviews have justified our continuing confidence in the contribution made by British voluntary organisations to developing countries. As a result, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has increased our support for the joint funding scheme from £23 million in 1991-92 to £28 million in 1992-93.

ENVIRONMENT

Marsham Street Premises

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what survey has been taken, or appreciation made, of changes in travel-to-work patterns for Government employees currently located in Marsham street, Westminster, that would occur consequent on their transfer to specific sites in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Howard: A sample survey to compare staff travelling time to alternative locations in London was carried out last year. A full survey of the present travelling arrangements of all staff currently in London is now being launched.

Council House Sales

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to allow local authorities to spend capital receipts raised from council house sales.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 13 May at column 608.

Cardigan Bay (Earthquake Simulation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Natural Environment Research Council concerning the recommendations of (a) the British geological survey and (b) the sea mammal research unit in relation to the simulated earthquake explosion proposed for Cardigan bay; and if he will place a copy of their relevant reports and recommendations in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has communicated with the Welsh Office, the British geological survey and the sea mammal research unit on proposed seismic testing on the sea bed in Cardigan bay. I understand that the Cardigan bay research has now been postponed.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had concerning the proposed simulated earthquake experimental explosion in Cardigan bay and its potential impact on the sonar neurology of dolphins, porpoises and seals.

Mr. Maclean: My Department has received a representation from Greenpeace concerning proposed seismic testing on the sea bed in Cardigan bay. I understand that the Cardigan bay research has now been postponed.

Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the use of economic instruments to encourage recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 19 May, Official Report, col. 73.

Radioactive Pollution (Baltic Sea)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what technical and ecological assistance the United Kingdom has offered to Russia to assist in the clean-up of radioactive pollution in the Baltic sea.

Mr. Maclean: No request for such assistance has been received.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the total value of the local government revenue support grant paid by his Department is attributable to allocations made for expenditure on services for which other Departments of State have primary responsibility.

Mr. Squire: The amount of revenue support grant paid to each receiving authority makes up the difference between the standard spending assessment for the area and the income the authority would receive from the community charge for standard spending plus redistributed non-domestic rates.

Total standard spending assessments for 1992-93, service by service, are as follows:

Education	18,352·7	48·3
Personal social services	4,734·6	12·5
Police	2,671·4	7·0
Fire and civil defence	1,105·2	2·9
Highways maintenance	1,806·0	4·8
All other services	6,834·9	18·0
Capital financing	2,487·9	6·5
	37,992·7	100·0

Services provided by my Department are covered by the all other services and capital financing blocks but cannot be identified separately within them.

Revenue support grant is not hypothecated to expenditure on particular services.

River Thames

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made by his Department for regular monitoring of the quality and cleanliness of the water in the River Thames; and what evidence he has of a deterioration of water quality and an increase in sludge deposits on the river bed at Greenwich over recent months.

Mr. Maclean: The National Rivers Authority is responsible for monitoring water quality; the results are available on public registers maintained in the NRA's regional offices. I understand that regular monitoring of the River Thames shows no evidence of changes in water quality other than those expected during a normal seasonal cycle, or of problems arising from sludge deposits at Greenwich.

ReChem Discharges

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions, between January 1990 and April 1992 discharges into Southampton Water from ReChem (Fawley) have exceeded limits set by the National Rivers Authority; and if he will provide details.

Mr. Maclean: The results of sampling carried out by the National Rivers Authority, together with details of any consequent action taken, are available on public registers maintained in the NRA's regional offices.

Bleak House

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the inspector's report on the application by British Coal Opencast to develop the site at Bleak house.

Mr. Baldry: The inspector's report has been fully considered, and a decision will be issued as soon as possible. The report will be published at the same time.

Opencast Mining

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review mineral planning guidance notes relating to opencast coal mining operations by incorporating in them a presumption in favour of the protection of the environment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The current guidelines are contained in Minerals Planning Guidance Note 3 (MPG 3) published in 1988. As part of a monitoring exercise on the effectiveness of the guidelines, my Department has recently completed a wide ranging consultation exercise on their practical operation. I shall consider whether there is any need for revision of MPG 3 in the light of that.

London Docklands

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the total cost of land purchases and land reclamation on sites in London docklands which have been sold on to private developers.

Mr. Redwood: Information in the form requested is only available at disproportionate cost. However, up to 31 March 1992, the London Docklands Development Corporation spent £161 million on land acquisition and £118 million on reclamation. Its policy is to sell such land to the private sector for development.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of public money spent by the London Docklands development corporation to date.

Mr. Redwood [Holding answer 21 May 1992]: To the end of 1991-92, the London Docklands development corporation had received £1,348 million in grant aid. The corporation has also been able to utilise receipts of some £300 million.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total value of business rates forgone in the London Docklands enterprise zone;

(2) what is the total of business rates forgone in the Canary Wharf development.

Mr. Redwood [Holding answer 21 May 1992]: Up to 31 March 1990, rate revenue forgone in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone amounted to £37,593,000. Information is not held centrally on rate revenue forgone for individual developments.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the price charged to the developers for the land on which Canary Wharf is being built.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The London Docklands Development Corporation sold the Canary Wharf site to Olympia and York for £20·2 million.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the financial benefits derived by Olympia and York by virtue of their presence in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone from investment allowance, business rate exemption or other advantages.

Mr. Squire [holding answer 21 May 1992]: This information is not available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table indicating for each year since 1981, at current prices, the amount of money provided in tax allowances in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total amount of capital allowances claimed by companies in the London Docklands enterprise zone.

(2) what is the total of capital allowances (a) claimed and (b) claimable for the Canary Wharf development.

Mr. Redwood: The total cost of capital allowances for all enterprise zones in Britain, estimated at 31 March 1990, was £660 million in 1989-90 prices. No information on the cost of capital allowances is available for individual enterprise zones or developments within them.

Recyclable Paper

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the British Paper and Board Industry Federation concerning methods of discouraging the disposal of recyclable paper in landfill sites; and what response he has made.

Mr. Maclean: My colleagues have received letters from the chairman of the federation's waste paper committee which set out their concerns. I will place in the Library a copy of the reply from my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the services provided and (b) the statutory responsibilities of each type of local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for individual local authorities to decide how to meet their statutory requirements. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to issue a descriptive list of functions conferred on local authorities by public general Acts to the Local Government Commission for its information once it has been set up. (There are also many local Acts conferring powers on local government which it would not be practicable to list.) A copy of the list will be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Interim Development Order Permissions

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many interim development order permissions have been registered in the Rossendale and Darwen constituency in the last 12 months.

Mr. Baldry: None. In the six months allowed under the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 for persons to apply to register interim development order planning permissions with their local mineral planning authority Lancashire county council received 23 applications; five of these were within Rossendale and one within Blackburn. Further information is available from Lancashire county council.

Fish Farming

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to bring marine fish farming within the direct control of elected planning authorities, as recommended by the Select Committee on the Environment in its report on coastal zone planning.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are considering the recommendations of the recent Environment Select Committee Report on Coastal Zone Protection and Planning, including its recommendations on marine fishfarming. It will issue a full response in due course.

Wild Birds

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in persuading European Community partners to introduce special safeguards on the transport of live wild birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The then Secretary of State wrote to Commissioner Carlo Ripa di Meana on 18 February urging him to press the European Commission to expedite the proposed further measures for regulating the wild bird trade which are provided for in the EC Directive on the Welfare of Live Animals During Transport. We have not yet received a response from the Commissioner, but will keep up the pressure for early progress.

In the meantime, we are taking a number of other measures to improve transport conditions for live birds. We are pursuing with the International Air Transport Association the possibility of limiting the size of live bird shipments, and are introducing a live animals checklist for all commercial shipments of live birds entering the United Kingdom. We remain very concerned about this issue and under the auspices of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), we will continue to play a leading part in the adoption off international measures to provide for the suspension trade in species suffering unacceptably high mortality.

Rent-to-Mortgage Scheme

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that former local authority tenants whose homes have been sold to housing associations will be able to participate in the rent-to-mortgage scheme.

Sir George Young: When housing subject on secure tenancies is transferred to private landlords, tenants have their right to buy preserved. In addition we propose to consult on the extension to them of the proposed statutory rents to mortgages scheme.

Empty Council Properties

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of empty council properties in Manchester on 1 May, divided into (a) management voids, (b) capital voids and (c) city challenge voids.

Mr. Baldry: The latest available information held centrally on empty council dwellings relates to 1 April 1991 and was provided by Manchester city council in its April 1991 housing investment programme return (HIP1), a copy of which is in the Library. This shows the number of vacant dwellings owned by the council broken down by cause of vacancy.

Marine Consultation Areas

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to his Department's consultation paper on marine consultation areas; and if he will indicate the number of responses which showed support for the concept.

Mr. Maclean: So far the Department and the Welsh Office have received some 146 responses to the consultation paper. It has not yet been possible to complete a detailed analysis.

Earth Summit

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends to issue any publications related to the Earth summit before the conference begins in Rio de Janeiro.

Mr. Howard: Britain has a proud history of contributing technology and expertise to assist developing countries. We have actively promoted the importance of technology co-operation to support sustainable development, both in the debates associated with preparations for the Earth summit in Rio and elsewhere. Continuing this process, my Department commissioned jointly with the Department of Trade and Industry a booklet based on case studies to illustrate the active part Britain already plays in technology co-operation and to provide insights into the range of mechanisms and processes that contribute to its success.

I am pleased to announce that this booklet, entitled "Technology Co-operation: Britain's Experience", is published today, in time to be circulated widely amongst delegates at the Earth Summit in June. It will also be made available around the world through British embassies and high commissions.

It illustrates the admirable activities of many British companies. It rightly emphasises the vital role that skill and know-how have in the transfer of technology and the crucial importance of normal commercial mechanisms. Other countries have much to learn from the positive approach of British business.

I have arranged for copies of the booklet to be made available to the Libraries of each House.

Property Services Agency

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to offer Property Services Agency projects for sale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am pleased to announce that the Government are now ready to offer PSA Projects for sale, by competitive tender.

The sale will be advertised widely here and in Europe. Next week copies of the sale memorandum will be available on request to those interested in buying PSA Projects from my advisers, Coopers and Lybrand. While I would prefer to sell projects as a single entity, it is open to prospective purchasers to indicate their interest in part purchases. Preliminary bids need to be submitted by 26 June. Shortlisted bidders will then be provided with more detailed information and be expected to make final offers approximately 4 weeks later.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimated dates for winding-up each urban development corporation; what arrangements have been made for the disposal of assets and transfer of powers once each urban development corporation has ceased to exist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 May 1992]: The wind-up dates of the urban development corporations will be considered in the context of the annual corporate planning round which is currently under way. Arrangements for the disposal of assets and the transfer of powers are under review.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about atmospheric pollution in the east Thames corridor.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 May 1992]: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations expressing concern about the possible cumulative environmental effects of various proposals to build power stations and incinerators in the east Thames corridor.

WALES

Energy Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role his Department now has in promoting energy conservation and efficiency in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department (Welsh Office) will continue to promote energy efficiency in all sectors of the economy. This is outlined in the "Energy Plan for Wales for the 1990s" (copy attached), which I launched in December last year.

The energy used in Wales, when transport is included, currently costs some 2 billion per year. It is thus one of the biggest elements in the economy and we have to use all forms of energy more efficiently—this is not only to save money; to improve competitiveness and to conserve finite resources but also to help the environment by helping to reduce the "greenhouse effect". It is estimated that savings in excess of 20 per cent. per year are not only possible but realistically achievable using well known techniques and this in turn will help to reduce the emission of carbon dioxide by over 2 million tonnes per annum.

Promotion of the more efficient use of energy is achieved by the Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) advising local industry, commerce and local authorities and through involvement with the local energy mangagement groups. The EEO will also disseminate literature, visit and advise companies, suggest sources of expert advice and will assist in organising seminars.

Following the general election, the policy lead in Government for energy efficiency now resides with the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Energy Efficiency Office is now part of the environment protection group.

I have every confidence that action arising from this reorganisation will play an important part in promoting the more effective use of energy and thereby reducing costs and at the same time helping the environment.

Rechar

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the working of the Rechar scheme in Wales; and if he will make it his policy to help local authorities who are currently without the necessary credit approvals to enable them to benefit from Rechar, to overcome this obstacle.

Mr. David Hunt: Commissioner Millan approved the South Wales Rechar programme on 26 February 1992 and administrative arrangements for the implementation of the programme in Wales are currently being put into place. The Government have announced new arrangements for ensuring that the additionality of European regional development fund (ERDF) grants is fully transparent. I shall be providing full additional expenditure cover to the relevant spending authorities for the ERDF grant element of Rechar schemes.

School Buses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidance to (a) county council education departments and (b) head teachers of grant-maintained schools with relation to (a) the maximum safe emissions from diesel-engined school buses, (b) the minimum maintenance standards of starter motors for diesel-engined school buses and (c) maximum periods for allowing diesel-engined school buses to stand with engines idling on school premises.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. These are matters for education authorities and the governors of schools, grant maintained or otherwise, to consider in the light of their policies for health and safety and vehicle maintenance.

The Secretary of State for Transport has powers to regulate emissions from motor vehicles and I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my right hon. Friend's Department.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: Figures for expenditure by the Department's information division, including staff and press cutting service but excluding the cost of purchasing media advertising and promotional material, cannot readily be disaggregated for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Figures for the succeeding years are:

1988-89	469,000
1989-90	487,000
1990-91	481,000
1991-92	481,000

Expenditure for 1992-93 is likely to be about £540,000.

Consultants Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Mobile Shops

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what government assistance is available towards the establishment and running of mobile shops in remote areas of rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: There are no schemes of Government assistance specifically directed towards the establishment and running of mobile shops in rural Wales.

However, such projects may be eligible under general schemes of assistance to business operated by the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and others.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: The information given as follows relates to surveys which contain at least one opinion seeking question and includes surveys notified to the Department by non-departmental public bodies in Wales:

1993 Visitor Survey of the National Parks of England and Wales (1992 Pilot) (CCW)
Expanding the Role of Women in North/Rural Wales Workforce—Survey of Women (WDA)
Business and Community Perceptions of the DBRW within its area (DBRW)
A470 Corridor Public Transport Study
Modified Consultation Procedure for A5 Halfway Bridge Improvement
A487 Penygroes/Llanllyfni Bypass and Y Groeslon Diversion

Note: CCW—Countryside Council for Wales
DBRW—Development Board for Rural Wales
WDA—Welsh Development Agency

School Playing Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which housing associations in Wales have built houses on land previously comprising school playing fields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the amount of money raised by the sale of school playing fields or parts of school playing fields in each of the counties of Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally.

Disabled Facility Grants

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on changes in his Department's instructions to local authorities on the method of funding disabled facility grants.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: For 1992-93 £26·3 million has been provided for mandatory disabled facilities and other discretionary grants, on top of the normal housing programme for local authorities. This is to enable authorities to play their full part in providing packages of support best suited to meet the individual needs of disabled people in close liaison with social services departments, and others.

INMOS Ltd.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he plans to take to secure the continuation of the fabrication in Newport, Gwent, of the transputer and other products of INMOS Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on 11 May last.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is fully committed to an equal opportunities policy which states that no job applicant or employee should receive less favourable treatment on the grounds of disablement. I have placed a copy of my Department's "Guide to Equal Opportunities" in the Library of the House.

At 1 April 1992, 1·7 per cent. of the staff in my Department have chosen to register as disabled. My Department also employs several unregistered disabled people.

The initiatives my Department has taken include the appointment of a departmental disabled persons officer; close liaison with the Department of Employment, disablement advisory services and disablement resettlement officers particularly on recruitment of disabled staff; the establishment of a work experience scheme for clients of the Cardiff employment rehabilitation centre; and the provision of special aids and equipment to disabled officers to enable them to carry out their duties effectively.

A further programme of action to achieve equality of opportunity in the Welsh Office for disabled people is to be issued to staff shortly. This will contain details of current practice and areas for future development with measurable objectives and target dates for their achievement.

RAF Brawdy and RNAD Trecwn

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times the task force on the effects of the closures of RAF Brawdy and RNAD Trecwn has met.

Mr. David Hunt: The full west Wales task force has met seven times. In addition a number of meetings of various task force sub-groups have been convened to consider specific issues.

Heritage Issues

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's role in heritage issues in the light of the creation of the Department of National Heritage.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department will liaise closely with the Department of National Heritage on all heritage issues for which my right hon. Friend is responsible.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the 1993-94 financial settlement for local authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have decided to delay the announcement of the Government's proposals for total standard spending and aggregate external finance until the autumn, because of the particular circumstances of the 1993-94 settlement.

In arriving at proposals I need to take into account the implications for the level of council tax. These will rest in part on the valuation of properties. This will not be completed in time for a July announcement.

I am also concerned that the most up-to-date and accurate information is available to determine the financing of local authorities' new responsibilities for community care.

In the circumstances, I concluded that local government in Wales would be better served by an autumn settlement.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Sherry

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy relating to European Community legislation with regard to duty on (a) British sherry, (b) Cyprus sherry and (c) Spanish sherry.

Sir John Cope: The Government's objective in the European Community negotiations is to achieve an agreement which allows existing United Kingdom duty arrangements for these products to continue. The Presidency proposals discussed at the 19 May ECOFIN would allow for this.

European Monetary Institute

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will describe the British representation at the European Monetary Institute.

Mr. Nelson: According to its statute the European Monetary Institute (EMI) will be directed and managed by the Council of the EMI. The Council will consist of the President of the EMI and the governor of each member state's national central bank. The United Kingdom member of the Council will therefore be the Governor of the Bank of England.

Property Charges

Mr. Speed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department first raised the matter of VAT and domestic service charges paid by freeholders on their property with the European Commission for an option; and when he expects a substantive reply.

Sir John Cope: The Office of the United Kingdom Permanent Representative to the European Community (UKREP) first wrote to the Commission on 23 April 1991. An interim reply was received from the Commission on 27 June 1991 and UKREP wrote again on 23 September. Customs are asking UKREP to remind the Commission that a substantive reply is still outstanding.

Coastal Resources

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will review the role of the Crown Estate Commissioners relating to the management of coastal resources, as recommended by the Environment Committee in its report on coastal zone planning.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government are considering the recommendations of the Environment Committee's report, and a response to the Committee's report will be issued in due course.

Finance Bill

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make available to hon. Members the customary notes on the Finance Bill's clauses.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. Notes on clauses are being placed in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House today.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of (a) the closure of BCCI and (b) the Bingham inquiry.

Mr. Nelson: It is estimated that the total cost incurred by Lord Justice Bingham and his inquiry team will amount to £500,000. This cost will be shared by the Treasury and the Bank of England. The cost to public funds of closing BCCI is included in the administrative and legal costs of the Government Departments concerned and of the Bank of England. To provide an accurate estimate of these costs would involve disproportionate cost.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals for debt collection for the world's least developed countries will be put forward by the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations conference on environment and development to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The United Kingdom Government have consistently taken the lead in advocating debt cancellation for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries. At the UNCED conference the United Kingdom Government will urge all creditor countries to participate in the implementation of Trinidad terms, under which 50 per cent. of these countries' eligible debt can be cancelled, and will call for further improvemetns to the terms along the lines originally proposed by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer in Trinidad in September 1990.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meetings of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 16 March during the Recess and again in Brussels on 19 May. Finance Ministers and Central Bank Governors also met informally on 8-10 May in Oporto. The United Kingdom was represented by the then Minister of State (on 16 March), the Governor of the Bank of England and me (on 8-10 May) and the Paymaster General and me (on 19 May).

On 16 March the Council discussed aid to the former Soviet Union stressing the primary role of the Bretton Woods institutions but also the need for an early disbursement of the Community's loans. Possible procedures for extending external lending by the EIB were also discussed but without agreement.

President Delors made a statement on the Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community which were briefly debated. The Council also adopted a recommendation on the Discharge of the 1990 Budget following statements on the Court of Auditors Report from Mr. Angioi, President of the Court, and Commissioner Schmidhuber. The United Kingdom's call for prior appraisal, better evaluation, and improvements in the economy and cost effectiveness of Community spending was well supported.

The Presidency's latest compromise texts on the Large Exposures and Capital Adequacy Directives were also discussed and remitted to officials for further work.

In discussion of various directives relating to excise duties and structures after the abolition of fiscal frontiers, a directive relating to the structure of excise duties on tobacco was agreed in principle and some progress was made towards agreements on the structures of duties on mineral oils. The Presidency also announced their intention to continue work at official level on directives concerning the abolition of withholding tax on interest and royalties and the treatment of offsetting losses. Finally, Commissioner Scrivener urged support for a Commission proposal for reducing excise duties on fuels made from agricultural products (so called biofuels).

In Oporto from 8-10 May ECOFIN Ministers met informally with their Central Bank Governors. There was a discussion of how the Community might promote non-inflationary growth which focused on the need to tackle structural rigidities especially in the markets for labour, capital and non-traded goods. In this context I reminded colleagues that the Working Time Directive was a retrograde step which would increase labour market rigidities rather than reducing them. It was agreed that structural issues should have a higher profile in multilateral surveillance discussions.

Aid to the former Soviet Union was also discussed and the predominant role of the Bretton Woods Institutions was reaffirmed. It was agreed that the Community's main role was in emergency and technical assistance rather than balance of payments support.

It was agreed that the Governors' Committee should pursue its work on the means for closer association between non-EC countries and the EMS. The Governors also reported on their technical work on EMU and I urged that they should keep ECOFIN closely in touch.

We agreed in principle to extend EIB lending to viable projects in further countries with which the Community has trade and co-operation agreements subject to annual ceilings and secondary EC Budget guarantees.

We also briefly discussed a Presidency paper on the need to improve EC budgetary discipline and transparency and many of my colleagues supported a move to enhance the role of ECOFIN in discussions of future financing more generally.

On 19 May, the Council discussed the economic situation in Germany and Italy as part of our regular examinations of national economic convergence programmes. The Council concluded that Germany was in a strong position to consolidate its public finances following the economic shock of reunification. The Council fully endorsed Germany's need to maintain a tight monetary policy while undertaking fiscal consolidation primarily through restraints on public expenditure. We noted that Germany's plans amounted to a freeze in public expenditure in real terms up to 1995 and to reduce its general government deficit from 4·1 per cent. in 1992 to 1·9 per cent. in 1995. Meanwhile the Council urged the need for wage moderation to avoid overburdening monetary policy and undermining competitiveness in East Germany and for greater efforts to remove structural rigidities in markets for labour, capital and non-traded goods. The Council noted that Germany expects to fulfil all the convergence criteria in time for a move to Stage 3 of EMU.

The discussion of Italy was a follow up to our discussion last November. Since then Italy has fallen short of its targets in a number of areas and the Council expressed "serious concern" at the budgetary situation and outlook. The Council called for "exceptional measures" in Italy's fiscal policy, and for action in several structural and institutional areas. The Council stated that the slippage in Italy's budgetary consolidation was such as to undermine the credibility of Italian economic policy. We concluded that without immediate and effective corrective measures Italy would probably fail to meet the EMU convergence criteria.

The Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community were discussed over lunch and concern was expressed by a number of states, including the United Kingdom, at the size of the Commission's proposed increases in spending. Member States also called for a fuller discussion of the proposals by ECOFIN before the Lisbon European Council.

On indirect taxes, the Presidency tabled nine draft directives covering excise duty rates and structures on tobacco products, mineral oils and alcoholic beverages; VAT rates and structures; and the VAT treatment of second-hand goods (including works of art).

The minor outstanding points on tobacco duty structures were resolved and the draft directive on mineral oil duty structures now allows for the continuation of all our current exemptions and rebates.

On tobacco rates we stressed the importance the United Kingdom attaches to improving the agreement reached at last June's ECOFIN on a minimum rate for cigarettes by supplementing it with an additional minimum cash figure; and we argued for a similar approach to the minimum duty rates for other tobacco products.

On alcohol duty structures, discussion focused on the text relating to intermediate products (fortified wines) which for different reasons a number of Member States (including the United Kingdom) were unable to agree. On alcohol rates we pointed out that as a major producer of spirits, which were in competition with wine, the United Kingdom could not agree a directive which allowed a zero rate for wine but required some Member States significantly to increase their duty rate on spirits (for example Scotch whisky), and that until this point was satisfactorily resolved we could not agree a minimum duty rate for fortified wines.

There was little substantive discussion of VAT issues. In relation to the draft VAT rates and structures directive, we reaffirmed the political commitment made last year that the United Kingdom had no intention of altering our present standard rate which is already above the proposed minimum rate of 15 per cent. In discussion of the VAT treatment of second-hand goods, we made clear the United Kingdom's view that imports of works of art should be exempt from VAT (as at present in the United Kingdom) rather than taxed as proposed, in order to preserve the important United Kingdom and European art market. I expect ECOFIN to return to this dossier on 9 June.

The Capital Adequacy Directive was also discussed and it was agreed that the Presidency's latest proposal addressing the eight most contentious issues would form a good basis for further work towards an overall political compromise. We stressed that there were a number of important issues outstanding, however, especially in the area of large exposures. The Presidency will be seeking a political agreement on these eight main issues at the next ECOFIN on 9 June. In the meantime we shall be pursuing our interests in further meetings of officials.

The guidelines for extending EIB lending to further non-EC countries agreed at the informal meeting in Oporto were also clarified and affirmed.

At the end of the meeting the Commission made a brief statement on the future of customs agents and also announced that a draft directive on carbon and energy taxes would be published soon.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Victoria Hospital

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of theatre sessions per week for each general surgeon in the Royal Victoria hospital.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not available in the form requested. However, the average number of theatre sessions per week for each general surgeon in the Royal Victoria hospital during the financial year 1990-91 was 2·6.

Housing Executive

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many tenants of Northern Ireland Housing Executive residential accommodation have been evicted in each of the last five years for non-payment of rent; and if he will give the figures by district office and region in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the number of tenants evicted in each of the last five years for non-payment of rent was as follows:

Region and District	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92

Housing Executive

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total amount of rent arrears due to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive outstanding by region within Northern Ireland at present and in each of the last two years.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that the total amount of rent and rates arrears owed to the Housing Executive at 31 March 1992 (the latest date for which figures are available) and at the end of the two previous years was as follows:

Region	31 March 1990 £ 000	31 March 1991 £ 000	31 March 1992 £ 000
Belfast	4,745	4,823	4,628
South East	2,961	3,103	2,907
South	1,623	1,801	1,645
[1]North East	2,916	3,101	3,173
[1]North West	2,900	3,015	—
[1]West	831	847	3,186
Total	15,976	16,690	15,539

[1]Note: With effect from 1 April 1991 the Coleraine district was transferred to the North East region while the remainder of the North West region was merged with the West region.

Patients (Treatment)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give in tabular form the number of patients receiving day surgery and those treated as in-patients since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The numbers treated as in-patients and day cases since 1985 are listed in the table. The figures relate to discharges and deaths from all specialities in all hospitals (including psychiatric) in Northern Ireland.

	Total in-patient admissions	Total day cases	Total in-patient admissions and day cases
1985	274,061	16,048	290,109
1986	268,880	21,113	289,993
1987	266,622	29,907	294,329
1988-89	266,530	43,729	310,259
1989-90	270,821	45,141	315,962
1990-91	272,744	49,724	322,468

Planning Commission

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) in how many cases in Belfast South his Department has taken action against refusal to obey decisions of the Planning Commission since 1985; and how many were successful in the courts;

(2) in how many cases in Northern Ireland his Department has taken action against refusal to obey decisions by the planning commissioners since 1985; and how many were successful in the courts.

Mr. Atkins: This information could be provided in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. However, since 1985, the Department of the Environment for NI has taken enforcement action in 530 cases, 20 of them in the Belfast South constituency. In 74 cases, eight of them in Belfast South, court action was necessary and in 48, two of which were in Belfast South, fines were imposed.

Women Doctors

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of women who graduated in medicine from Queen's university since 1982 and the number who have been able to advance in their chosen specialities of general practice, surgery, obstetrics, medicine, psychiatry, ENT and radiology.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 555 women have graduated in medicine from Queen's university since 1982. The number who have been able to advance in their chosen specialities is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Planning Permissions

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of time taken to grant planning permission for conversion of property and commercial development.

Mr. Atkins: For the year ended 31 March 1992 the median number of calendar days taken to decide planning applications for the conversion of a property to another use was 67. The corresponding figure for applications involving commercial development was 70.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many requests for planning permission take over two years from formal application to decision.

Mr. Atkins: Of the 18,341 planning applications determined in the year ended 31 March 1992, 62 or 0·3 per cent. took over two years to decide.

Shop-mobility Scheme

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals are being considered to provide a shop-mobility scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: There are no plans at present for a shop-mobility scheme in Northern Ireland but I have asked the Belfast chamber of trade and the Belfast city council to consider how such a scheme might be introduced.

General Surgery

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the average weekly number of theatre sessions for general surgery in each of the four area boards since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The average weekly numbers of theatre sessions in the general surgery speciality in each of the health and social services boards for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are listed in the table. Information prior to 1989-90 is not available centrally.

Board	1989-90	1990-91

Squatting

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement giving details on squatting in each Northern Ireland Housing Executive region, by district office.

Mr. Hanley: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and I am advised by its chief executive that at 31 March 1992 the total number of squatters by region and district was as follows:

Home Loss Payments

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when provision for home loss payments under the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 will be brought up to date for Northern Ireland; and if he will make it his policy to apply the legislation retrospectively to 16 November 1990 to ensure that Northern Ireland home owners are treated on an equal basis with those in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: It is proposed to make such provision in June 1992 and it is my intention to introduce an administrative scheme applying the new criteria retrospectively to 16 November 1990.

Angel Dust

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been prosecuted for the use of clenbuterol, known as angel dust, in livestock; how many such prosecutions are pending; what further controls of the abuse of clenbuterol he proposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Six persons have been prosecuted under the Medicines Act 1968 for the illegal administration of clenbuterol. No prosecutions are pending.

New powers to control the abuse of clenbuterol and other illegal substances are available under the Animals, Meat and Meat Products (Examination for Residues and Maximum Residue Limits) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1992 which came into operation on 27 February 1992.

The most important new control is the power to condemn live animals which are found to contain residues of clenbuterol or other illegal substances.

The meat inspection authorities will employ these new powers to the full in their efforts to stamp out the use of illegal drugs by cattle producers.

Voters

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many electors there were in Northern Ireland in 1983; what is the total electorate now; and what plans there are to review both the number of constituencies and constituency boundaries.

Mr. Hanley: The number of electors on the register of electors published in February 1983 who were eligible to vote at parliamentary elections in Northern Ireland was 1,061,185. The corresponding figure for 1992 was 1,141,466.

The review of the number of boundaries of constituencies in Northern Ireland is a matter for the independent Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland but I understand that the commision is unlikely to announce its next periodical review until the current review of the number, names and boundaries of district councils and the wards into which they are divided is complete.

Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cost of the combined salaries of the director and assistant directors of the new Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education.

Mr. Hanley: The cost is £144,968 per annum.

Housing Grant

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been received for each type of housing grant in each month of the current year.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the chairman has advised me that the information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, he has also informed me that the total numbers of applications received in January and February were 1,516 and 2,108 respectively. Since when the scheme has been temporarily shut down, with the exception of a limited range of grants for the disabled, applications for which have been accepted from 14 May.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the improvements made by his Department in provision for the disabled since May 1979.

Mr. Scott: Since 1979 the Department has made a large number of improvements in benefit provision for disabled people. These have been aimed to provide a comprehensive and coherent system of disability benefits which not only gives priority for extra help to those disabled early in life, who have lost the opportunity to earn and save, but also promotes independence and integration.

In that time spending on benefits for long-term sick and disabled people has increased by more than 155 per cent. in real terms to £12·25 billion. On top of this increased expenditure two new disability benefits disability living allowance and disability working allowance were introduced in April 1992.

The other main improvements have been as follows:

Benefit and Improvement
Severe disablement allowance Introduced November 1984. In December 1990 age-related additions introduced.
Mobility allowance Extended to deaf-blind people in April 1990 and double amputees in April 1991. Taken out of taxation in 1982.
Attendance allowance Extended to the under 2s in April 1990, and the higher rate extended to terminally ill people without need to serve waiting period, in October 1990.
Income-related benefits Increases above the rate of inflation on premiums for long-term sick and disabled people from April 1990; child's disablement premium more than doubled to align with adult rate.
Independent Living Fund Introduced June 1988. Provision currently £54 million, 10 times greater than at its start.
Invalid care allowance Extended to non-relatives in 1982 and to married women in 1984.

War Pensions

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities give a full disregard to war pensions in the calculation of housing and poll tax benefits; and how many authorities take part of the pension into account as income in those calculations.

Mr. Burt: In the financial year 1990-91, 374 of the 479 local authorities reported that they exercised their discretionary power to disregard more than the statutory £10 of a war pension. Of these:

289 authorities disregard both war widows' and war disablement pensions in full, of which five authorities responsible for both benefits operated a scheme for housing benefit only and two operated a scheme for community charge benefit only;

Five authorities fully disregarded war widows' pensions, of which three also disregarded war disablement pensions in part;

28 authorities fully disregarded war disablement pensions, of which six also disregarded war widows' pensions in part.

The remaining 52 authorities took some part of a war widow's or war disablement pension into account as income.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest position regarding discussions to simplify the war pensions scheme.

Mr. Lilley: My noble Friend Lord Henley, the Minister with special responsibility for war pensions, is writing to members of the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions advising that we shall be introducing next April a number of changes which will help to simplify the scheme.

Family Credit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will lose from the change in the qualifying hours threshold for income support or family credit from 24 to 16 hours; and what savings will be made after transitional protection has run out in each case.

Mr. Burt: No one who was working, or whose partner was working, between 16 and 24 hours a week and receiving Income Support at the point of change lost their entitlement to that benefit as a result of the change in the hours threshold in income support and family credit. Many of those affected will be families with children who will be better off on family credit than they would have been on income support. Many others will remain on income support under special provisions giving them indefinite protection.

As families affected will either be better off or no worse off, there is expected to be a benefit cost, rather than a saving, as a result of the changes.

Pension Schemes

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the reason for the delay in laying the regulations on disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pension schemes; and when he expects them to be laid.

Miss Widdecombe: The Occupational and Personal Pension Schemes (Miscellaneous Amendment) Regulations have been delayed to allow time for consideration of the Social Security Select Committee's report on the "Operation of Pension Funds" in relation to those issues upon which the regulations impinge. We expect the regulations to be laid shortly.

Nicola Clark

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the case of Nicola Clark, setting out the grounds on which her claim for benefits is to be opposed at the hearing to be held on 16 June.

Mr. Scott: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Clothing and Bedding

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants received (a) grants and (b) loans to enable clothing and bedding to be afforded during 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: Provisional figures show that 81,450 loans and 36,210 grants were awarded for those items.

Benefits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list each of the benefits for which his Department is responsible giving in each case (a) the total number estimated to be eligible for that benefit, (b) the total number receiving that benefit, (c) the cost in a full year of that benefit and (d) an estimate of the cost in a full year if everyone entitled to that benefit received it.

Mr. Scott: Information on the numbers eligible for each benefit is not available. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Most central Government support for rent rebates appears in the Department of the Environment and Welsh Office programmes, as rent rebate subsidy in England and Wales is now paid from local authorities' housing revenue accounts.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for each year since its introduction, what was the number of users of the Independent Living Fund, broken down into the geographical areas covered by individual benefit offices.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

DEFENCE

HMS Revenge

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Revenge ended its commission; where the submarine is now; and at which dockyard its fuel will be removed.

Mr. Aitken: HMS Revenge completed her last commission on 13 April 1992 at the Clyde submarine base, Faslane. She will leave shortly for Rosyth, where she will be defuelled and de-equipped in due course.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the report from the National Radiological Protection Board on the health of the British nuclear test veterans will be published.

Mr. Aitken: The update report into mortality and cancer incidence among test participants will be published as soon as practically possible during 1992 consistent with maintenance of the highest standards of scientific rigour.

War Office Buildings

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current use of, or plan for, the Whitehall block of buildings, formerly known as the War Office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The old War Office building has been undergoing a major refurbishment which is now nearing completion. It will be re-occupied later in the year by headquarters staff of the Ministry of Defence.

Liquid Crystal Displays

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discovery and exploitation of liquid crystal displays by the former Royal Signals Research Establishment at Malvern; and what developments have been made with this technology by the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: I have asked the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency to reply to the hon. Member.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the level of staffing of the Defence Research Agency on (a) 1 April 1992 and (b) 1 April 1991; and what is the planned level for 1 April 1993.

Mr. Aitken: I have asked the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency to reply to the hon. Member.

Brawdy Airfield

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent to date on Brawdy airfield survival measures phase B; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF Brawdy airfield survival measures phase 2 project was cancelled in January 1991: the only expenditure incurred was on design work and fees. Precise information on costs is not immediately available and I will write to the hon. Member.

Barrack Modernisation

Mr. John Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent to date on barrack modernisation schemes at (a) Fallingbostel, St. Barbara, (b) Lippstadt, Churchill and (c) Detmold, Hobart; and whether these schemes will be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Spending to date on barrack modernisation projects completed in the barracks in question is as follows:

	£ million
(a) Fallingbostel, St. Barbara	4·3
(b) Lippstadt, Churchill	7·5
(c) Detmold, Hobart	5·3

St. Barbara barracks, Fallingbostel has been confirmed for retention and further modernisation work is expected to begin there shortly. On current plans its improvements programme will be completed in 1996. No further work on Churchill barracks, Lippstadt and Hobart barracks, Detmold will be undertaken until decisions on their future are made.

Cambodia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the composition, role, equipment and command structure of the proposed Royal Navy and Royal Marine contribution to the United Nations force in Cambodia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom plans to provide 11 Royal Navy and Royal Marines Officers and up to 59 other ranks as part of the naval group within the United Nations Transition Authority in Cambodia (UNTAC). The role of the United Kingdom element of the naval group will be to assist in patrolling coastal waters and rivers to monitor compliance with the prohibition on the external supply of arms and equipment to the Cambodian factions, agreed as part of the comprehensive political settlement signed in Paris on 23 October 1991. They will be operating from Cambodian vessels and will be taking no arms or special equipment. While in Cambodia, the United Kingdom element will be fully integrated within the overall command structure of the UNTAC naval group.

HMS Courageous and HMS Valiant

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions he has taken on the future of HMS Courageous and HMS Valiant.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Courageous was paid off from the fleet in April of this year. HMS Valiant remains in service.

Gulf War

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the numbers of deaths and serious injuries suffered by British service men in Operation Granby/Desert Storm in the Gulf, arising from tank or aircraft fired anti-tank Sabot missiles tipped with depleted uranium launched by allied forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were no such deaths or injuries.

Vosper Thornycroft

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet considered the proposal by Vosper Thornycroft to construct a Sandown class hull; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The company's proposal was carefully considered, but we have no requirement to order another Sandown class Minehunter for some time. Our policy remains to place orders after competition, wherever possible.

Staff Relocation

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 41, if he will set out any disadvantages of allocating all naval support command staff on one site.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some disadvantages, such as inconvenience caused by housing moves for those personnel concerned, are inevitable with any relocation exercise. That is why it is important to assess all relevant factors involved, including the economic cost-effectiveness and the impact on operational efficiency likely to result from any such relocation.

RAF Personnel

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for reducing personnel numbers in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To achieve the planned force levels for 1 April 1995 announced in the House on 25 July 1990, columns 470-73, the RAF will need to reduce its total manpower by some 11,000 over the period 1 April 1992 to 1 April 1995. This reduction will be achieved mainly through normal turnover, reduced intakes and other manning regulators. A limited redundancy programme currently estimated at some 1,150 and spread over the period 1993 to 1995 will, however, be necessary to remove residual surpluses in specified branches and trades. It is hoped to meet this programme through voluntary redundancy, although some compulsory redundancies may be necessary.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is responsible for maintaining waiting lists in districts where national health service trusts are in operation.

Mr. Sackville: Trusts are responsible for maintaining a record of the patients waiting for treatment by their units.

District health authorities have a responsibility to maintain a record of patients waiting at their directly managed units as well as a record of all their residents waiting for treatment, regardless of where they are waiting.

Hospital Beds, Sheffield

Ms. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of beds in Sheffield hospitals, by category, (a) in 1990 and (b) at present.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is given in the tables. The most recent data on activity (1987-88 to 1990-91) show an increase of 9·4 per cent. in the number of patients treated on a day case basis, and of 11·1 per cent. in the number of in-patients treated.

Dentists

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the working of the new dentists' contract.

Dr. Mawhinney: The new dental contract, introduced in October 1990, is the first major change to NHS dentistry since 1948. It encourages preventive dentistry and provides all round continuing care. Benefits to patients include treatment plans, emergency cover and repair and replacement of certain restorations free of charge.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the review of national health service dentistry; and what assessment she has made of the effect of the proposed fee levels on the number of dentists remaining within the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not yet able to say how the review of dental remuneration to which we are committed will be carried forward. The level of dental fees in 1992-93 is a matter for the dental rates study group which will meet shortly.

Pre-senile Dementia

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals she has for funding a research programme into (a) incidence, (b) treatment and (c) recovery rates from pre-senile dementia; (2) what statistics she has on the social and financial background factors in the multi-factorial epidemiology of pre-senile dementia.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are conducting research into Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease which is a very rare form of pre-senile dementia.

Our major research effort is on the much larger numbers of those suffering from dementia in the over-65 age group.

Patients Statistics

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average number of patients waiting for treatment (a) as in-patients and (b) as day care patients for each financial year from 1988-89 in Darlington.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Tampons

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to have adequate safety warnings of the risk of toxic shock issued with tampons.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are working with tampon manufacturers to reduce to the minimum the risk of toxic shock syndrome. Every pack of tampons contains a leaflet giving information on toxic shock and advice on how to use tampons properly, so minimising the risk. Manufacturers, in agreement with the Departments of Health and of Trade and Industry, have recently improved labelling of tampon packets and instruction leaflets. The warnings on packets emphasise the need to read the instruction leaflet which now gives more information on toxic shock, including what to do if symptoms occur.

Charitable Fund-raising

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by (a) regional health authority and (b) district health authority for the financial years (i) 1990-91, (ii) 1991-92 and (iii) 1992-93 to date (y) the number of appeals and (z) the amounts required being raised by charitable fund-raising by the national health service; and to what the proceeds from these appeals will be allocated.

Mr. Sackville: Detailed information on the number and nature of charitable fund-raising appeals by the national health service is not collected centrally. However, the accounts of health authorities and special trustees in England for 1990-91 (the latest available) show that a number of those authorities and trustees raised an aggregate net total of £5·9 million from fund raising conducted under section 5 of the National Health Service Act 1980. This sum excludes amounts raised on behalf of the National Health Service by independent, registered charitable trusts which account separately for their activity.

We have made it clear that the money raised through these very worthwhile voluntary efforts will not be deducted from the funds the Government allocate to the national health service.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total sum paid out in fees by her Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is her estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to apportion expenditure between the Departments of Health and Social Security prior to 1985-86. The estimated expenditure for each succeeding financial year from 1985-86 on fees and expenses for management consultants was as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1985-86	0·479
1986-87	2·103
1987-88	1·244
1988-89	1·584
1989-90	4·870
1990-91	2·870
1991-92	2·806

The figures up to and including 1988-89 are approximate as expenditure was from a joint Health and Social Security budget. In some cases expenditure has been apportioned where consultants have been engaged on both health and social security matters.

The estimate of expenditure for 1992-93 is £4·229 million.

Health Care, Rossendale

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to improve women's health care in Rossendale, particularly in relation to the prevention and treatment of cervical cancer.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom was the first country in the European Community and one of the first countries in the world to establish a national cervical screening programme based on computerised call and recall. The Government are committed to this programme and cervical cancer was specifically mentioned in the Health of the Nation Green Paper. To improve uptake of cervical screening GP target payments were introduced; 91 per cent. of GP practices now receive a target payment.

For information on the local provision of health services in Rossendale, including services for women's health care and the prevention and treatment of cervical cancer, my hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. William Ashworth, chairman of Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking to reduce the infant mortality rate (a) nationally and (b) in Rossendale.

Mr. Sackville: The infant mortality rate for England is at an all time low of 7·4 per 1,000 live births in 1991 compared to rate of 12·8 in 1979.

One of the major priorities for the NHS this year will be to set targets to reduce the number of stillbirths and deaths in infancy. This, together with the NHS' participation in the nationwide Confidential Enquiry into Stillbirths and Deaths in infancy, announced by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Health last summer, should help to ensure the continued reduction of these tragic losses.

For information on the provision of local health services my hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. William Ashworth, chairman of Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Sackville: The register of surveys maintained by the Central Statistical Office lists the following surveys carried out since 1 November 1991:

Drugs: Parent's Monitor
Nursing Monitor 1992: Wave 3
Drugs "Double Head" Research
Wessex Drugs Research
Attitudes Among Patients Leaving Trust Hospitals

Community Support Services

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to require all meetings of community support services to be held in public except where the confidentiality of patients would be compromised.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 18 May at column 56. The Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 is also applicable to regional health authorities and NHS trusts.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department received an application for trust status, or an expression of interest in trust status, from the community support services in Wirral health authority; what the outcome of that application is; and if she will give the reasons for the decision.

Dr. Mawhinney: Wirral community unit was one of the 153 hospitals and other units which expressed interest in the autumn of 1991 in applying to become an NHS trust in April 1993. It has not so far applied formally. If the unit does apply, there will be three months public consultation on the application, as well as a detailed assessment of the application, after which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will decide whether to establish the unit as a trust.

Births, Islington

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each of the past five years have been removed from general practitioners' lists in the Camden and Islington family health service area as a result of asking for a home confinement when giving birth.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no requirement to record such information.

Hospital Doctors (Working Hours)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior hospital doctors she expects to be working more than a 40-hour week by the end of 1994; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The aim of the new deal is to reduce junior hospital doctors' maximum average contracted hours (which includes on-call time) to 72 per week by 31 December 1994. It is the intention, however, that no doctor will actually work more than an average of 56 hours per week by this time.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the total expenditure by her Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if she will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Functions which are commonly associated with press and public relations are carried out by the Department's Information division. Manpower and running costs of this division are:

1989-90 Expenditure	0·890
1990-91 Expenditure	1·250
1991-92 Estimated Expenditure	1·540
1992-93 Estimated Expenditure	1·690

Information for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 is not available.

Homeopathic Treatment

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how her Department intends to make provision for the demand for national health service homeopathic treatment in the Bristol area; and what are her Department's plans for the Bristol Homeopathic hospital.

Mr. Yeo: Responsibility for the purchasing of health services in the Bristol area, including homeopathic services, rests with the Bristol and district health authority. The health authority have given an undertaking that homeopathic services will continue to be provided for Bristol residents for as long as demand exists. The Department has no plans for the Bristol Homeopathic hospital. The hospital is not included in the asset base of the United Bristol Healthcare Trust and therefore decisions relating to its current or future use remain the responsibility of the Bristol and district health authority in consultation with the South Western regional health authority.

Victoria Central Hospital, Wallasey

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if a decision has yet been made on the likely future for the Victoria central hospital, Wallasey.

Mr. Sackville: The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. R. S. Gordon, chairman of Wirral health authority, to discuss any specific aspects of the hospital's future.

Section 64 Grants

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make an announcement on the determination of section 64 grant applications for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: The overall provision for support to voluntary organisations under the Section 64 General Scheme for 1992-93 has been set at £17·8 million—a 12 per cent. increase in one year. Most grants are awarded for a three-year period and the majority of those organisations applying for renewal in 1992-93 have been notified of the outcome. Most of the organisations making new applications have also been notified and the remainder will be informed as soon as possible.

Project 2000

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any additional colleges of nursing have been approved to implement Project 2000 nurse training.

Mr. Sackville: Agreement has been given to the implementation of Project 2000 in 15 colleges of nursing during 1992-93, subject to the necessary educational approval being obtained from the English National Board. This will bring the total number of colleges offering these courses in England to 64. The approval of these schemes will result in complete implementation of Project 2000 in four regions (Oxford, Wessex, South Western and East Anglia) and will cover at least 65 per cent. of pre-registration student places in the other 10 regions.

The new schemes cover the following health authorities:

North East Thames RHA	–	North London
Mersey RHA	–	Chester and Wirral
Northern RHA	–	Northumbria
Bethlem and Maudsley SHA	–	Bethlem and Maudsley
South Western RHA	–	Tor
Wessex RHA	–	Bath and Swindon
West Midlands RHA	–	Queen Elizabeth
Yorkshire RHA	–	Humberside
Yorkshire RHA	–	Airedale and Bradford
Trent RHA	–	Sheffield and North Trent (extension)
East Anglian RHA	–	Norfolk
North Western RHA	–	Lancashire
South East Thames RHA	–	Sussex and Kent Institute
South West Thames RHA	–	College to be confirmed by RHA
North West Thames RHA	–	Hertfordshire

The increased funding for 1992-93 of £98 million brings to £207 million the amount provided for Project 2000 implementation since 1989-90. This demonstrates the Government's clear commitment to the development of a more flexible and autonomous nursing workforce, which is better equipped to respond to the challenges and changes of the future.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will bring forward proposals to ensure that residents of care or nursing homes have security of tenure in law;

(2) if she will bring forward proposals to require the completion of a written contract for accommodation and services prior to admissions to care and nursing homes.

Mr. Yeo: I have no plans to do so. "Home Life" the established code of practice for residential care recommends that, before admission, residents should be given a full statement of the terms and conditions on which accommodation and care are offered, including details of the procedure for terminating the contract between the home and the resident. A copy of the code is available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has regarding the adequacy of the monitoring by inspection units of residential care and nursing homes during the 12 months ended 31 March.

Mr. Yeo: Local authority inspection units are responsible only for the inspection of residential care homes. Health authorities inspect nursing homes.

In November 1991, the Department's social services inspectorate carried out a survey by postal questionnaire of the stage of development reached by inspection units to the end of September. The results were encouraging, showing widespread compliance with both the letter and the spirit of our directions and policy guidance. In 1992-93 the inspectorate will carry out a programme of more detailed and evaluative monitoring.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to change the current inspection arrangements for care or nursing homes.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce a requirement for the regular statutory review of the individual circumstances of all residents in residential care or nursing homes, where the resident concerned or their representative so desires.

Mr. Yeo: We see no need to do so. "Home Life", the established code of practice for residential care, acknowledges the need for regular reviews and gives clear practice guidance on the subject. A copy of the code is available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the impact of the April 1993 change in community care on the current number of residential or nursing places in private homes.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are committed to a mixed economy of residential and nursing home care and it expects that the independent sector (private and voluntary) will continue to play a significant role in the provision of such care. New community care arrangements to be introduced in April 1993 will link the provision of care more closely to assessment of needs. Significant numbers of people will continue to need residential or nursing home care, particularly as the numbers of very elderly people continue to increase. However, it is generally expected that in some cases alternative, more appropriate forms of care will be able to be provided. The Government therefore share the widely held view that there is likely to be a decline in the rate of growth in residential care as a whole.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given regarding the inspection by local authorities of the audited accounts of private residential care or nursing homes (a) as part of the annual inspection process and (b) prior to the placement of a contract under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Yeo: The Department does not give local or health authorities detailed guidance about how they should carry out their statutory inspections of private residential care and nursing homes. "Home Life"—a code of practice for residential care endorsed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State—recommends that financial implications should be among the matters discussed with those proposing to open a home.

The policy guidance "Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond" advises local authorities to check the credentials of potential contractors, including their financial standing. It is for authorities to decide how best to do this.

Copies of the code and the guidance are available in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor the adequacy of the medical care available to residents of care homes.

Mr. Yeo: Those who run registered residential care homes are required by law to arrange for residents to receive necessary medical treatment and to keep records of such treatment. We would expect these arrangements to be monitored in the course of the regular inspections that local inspection units undertake.

The Department is preparing revised and updated guidance about the health care of elderly people in residential care, for use in both local authority and independent sector homes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward proposals to allow persons in residential or nursing care homes the same access to domiciliary, health and social services as persons living in their own homes.

Mr. Yeo: People in residential homes of all types have the same rights to receive social services and health services under the National Health Service as people living in their own homes.

Patients in independent nursing homes already have access to primary care services and acute hospital services.

The Registered Homes Act 1984 requires the person registered to provide adequate staff, equipment, facilities and services bearing in mind the age, sex and condition of the patients being cared for. Our guidance to health authorities is that support services such as physiotherapy and incontinence materials fall within the care that nursing homes could reasonably be expected to provide for their patients. Health authorities may provide support services to nursing home patients at their discretion.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken as to the extent to which elderly persons positively choose to enter institutional care.

Mr. Yeo: The Department has funded a recently-published study by the Policy Studies Institute, which examined issues of choice, participation and satisfaction among elderly people "at the margin" of community and residential care. The study explored, among other issues, the extent to which elderly people positively choose to enter institutional care.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the relative levels of mental and physical functioning of residents in local authority part III accommodation compared with residents in private residential care.

Mr. Yeo: The Department has in recent years funded a number of research studies on residential care, at the universities of Kent and York. One focus of these studies has been on the level of physical and mental functioning of residents in local authority part III accommodation and private residential care. The results were published in June 1991 by the personal social services research unit, university of Kent, in discussion paper No. 725, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Long-term Care Insurance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards long-term care insurance schemes.

Mr. Yeo: The Government welcome schemes which widen opportunities for people to make provision for meeting future long-term care needs.

Nursing Care of the Elderly

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been given to local authorities regarding the placement of contracts for the residential nursing care of the elderly with establishments outside individual local authority boundaries.

Mr. Yeo: The White Paper "Caring for People", (Cm. 849), made it clear that under arrangements to be introduced from 1 April 1993 people assessed by local authorities as requiring nursing home care will, subject to the availability of resources, be able to seek a place in an establishment in another authority's area. Where the cost of that home would be more than the authority would normally be willing to fund individuals, or their relatives, may agree to pay the difference. Subsequent guidance has emphasised the need to take full account of individual's preferences in making placements in residential care and nursing homes.

Loans Criteria

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are laid down by her Department concerning the granting of loans to district health authorities by regional health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorities have no powers to borrow funds. Regional health authorities are responsible for setting allocations to their districts, and may agree to increase a district's allocation in one year on the understanding that a compensating reduction is made in a later year. There are no centrally laid down criteria for such adjustments, since each case must be considered on its merits and account has to be taken of the region's overall priorities and resources.

Stockport

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for ensuring that any future trust in Stockport will charge affordable prices for its health services.

Dr. Mawhinney: All NHS trusts depend for their income on their ability to secure contracts with local purchasers. They need to be able to compete in terms of cost and quality with other local NHS provider units. In addition, trusts are expected to set their prices for NHS contracts using principles common to the NHS as a whole. They are not allowed to cross-subsidise services or to build in profit margins.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make an announcement concerning the funding of community care during the next financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: As we have always made clear, announcements about the funding of community care in 1993-94 will be made in the context of the local government expenditure survey.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which local authority housing departments and other local housing agencies have been involved in the drawing up of community care plans.

Mr. Yeo: The successful implementation of "Caring For People" is very dependent on effective collaboration between agencies, including housing authorities and other housing providers. In drawing up community care plans local authorities must consult their local health and housing authorities as well as others concerned with the provision of community care services. The role played by housing authorities in preparing community care plans is one of the issues addressed in our six monthly monitoring of the progress authorities are making in implementing "Caring For People". The monitoring reports have recently been received and are being assessed.

Leaflets on Sun's Rays

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library leaflets produced by her Department which give advice about exposure to the sun's rays; and if she will make a statement about changes to this advice.

Mr. Sackville: Copies of the Health Education Authority leaflet "Are you dying to get a suntan" are available in the Library. The independent expert advisory Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) have been asked to advise on what further steps, if any, Government should consider in relation to ultraviolet radiation and health risks. The Committee's advice, which will be published, is expected shortly.

Maternity Services

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to respond to the second report from the Health Committee of Session 1991-92, on maternity services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In the summer.

Prescriptions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out for each year from 1979 the total number of prescriptions issued (a) by general practitioners and (b) by hospitals, showing, for each year and category, the number of prescriptions paid for by the recipient and the number exempt from payment, and showing, separately, the number in each category of exemption.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 20 May 1992]: The available information is in the tables. Information about items prescribed by hospitals and dispensed by hospital pharmacists is not available.

Table I.

Number of items prescribed by general practitioners and hospitals and dispensed by community pharmacists in each year from 1979 to 1991 for which patients (a) paid a charge when the item was dispensed; (b) did not pay a charge when the item was dispensed, and reason for non-payment (millions)

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Peru

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take up with the Peruvian Government the question of human rights abuses in that country; if he will arrange to raise these matters in the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I share the hon. Gentleman's concern. We take every appropriate opportunity to emphasise to the Peruvian authorities their obligations to respect and protect human rights. The Peruvian charge d'affaires is due to call at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 22 May. When President Fujimori called on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier this year, he was left in no doubt about the strength of feeling in this country. The next occasion on which this matter might be raised at the United Nations would be the autumn meeting of the General Assembly.

Turkey

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government will review the sale of arms to Turkey in the light of concern about Turkey's human rights record, in particular in respect to its Kurdish population.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are not considering an embargo on arms sales to Turkey. Turkey is a NATO ally, which has given and continues to give firm support to the Coalition during and after the Gulf conflict. Arms sales to Turkey are subject to the standard export licence procedure. Under this procedure, all applications are scrutinized in accordance with stringent criteria. These include an assessment of the recipient country's human rights record.

Mikhail Nizguretsky

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Mikhail Nizguretsky and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made various representations to the Russian authorities on behalf of Mr. Nizguretsky. In Moscow in March I raised human rights issues with the Russian First Deputy Foreign Minister, including the case of Mr. Nizguretsky.

Albania

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have now been made for United Kingdom diplomatic representations to Albania; and what proposals he has to establish a mission in that country in the future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sir Stephen Egerton KCMG, Her Majesty's ambassador to the Italian Republic has been additionally appointed as non-resident ambassador to the Republic of Albania. There are at present no plans to establish a resident mission in the country.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Bennisa Heifetz of Moscow who would like to join her son in Israel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made various representations to the Russian authorities on behalf of Ms. Heifetz. In Moscow in March I raised human rights issues with the Russian First Deputy Foreign Minister, including the case of Ms. Heifetz.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Yevgeny Rozenblit and his family of Sverdlovsk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of Yevgeny Rozenblit and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Semyon Kreiman and his family of Moscow.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of Semyon Kreiman and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

British Council

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has received an application for an exhibition relating to the work of the British Council to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 13 July to 17 July 1992.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office estimates that it will spend £175,000 on fees to management consultants in the 1992-93 financial year.

Charges to the subhead which covers management consultants for the financial years 1983-84 to 1991-92 are as follows:

1983-84	141,189·61
1984-85	160,593·26
1985-86	121,673·81
1986-87	201,846·61
1987-88	200,122·84
1988-89	213,835·37
1989-90	272,164·00
1990-91	274,313·00
1991-92	180,690·00

These are total charges to the subhead and include payments other than to management consultants.

Figures for the financial years 1979-80 to 1982-83 are no longer available.

St. Helena and Tristan da Cunha

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last reviewed the territorial limits of Tristan da Cunha and St. Helena.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The territorial limits for St. Helena and Dependencies including Tristan da Cunha were last reviewed prior to the publication of the St. Helena and Dependencies (Territorial Sea) Order 1989 which came into force on 1 January 1990 and set territorial limits at 12 miles.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish a 200-mile limit around St. Helena and Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Fishery limits of 200 miles were declared for St. Helena under the St. Helena Fishery Limits Ordinance 1977. For Tristan da Cunha the 200-mile fishery limits were declared under the Tristan da Cunha Fishery Limits Ordinance 1983. Fishery limits are distinct from the limits of territorial waters.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for exploiting the tourism potential of Tristan da Cunha and St. Helena via Ascension Island.

Mr. Garel-Jones; The Government of St. Helena are examining proposals for the promotion of a small tourism industry on the island, but exploitation would be dependent on the introduction of a vessel that would provide a frequent service between St. Helena and Ascension Island.

There are no plans to exploit the tourism potential of Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the advice he has received from the Hydrographer about the establishment of 200 mile limits around St. Helena and Tristan da Cunha.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Hydrographic details of the 200-mile fishery limits for St. Helena and Tristan da Cunha are published and are on selected Admiralty charts available from the hydrographic office and chart agents.

Thailand

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Thailand about recent human rights violations.

Mr. Goodlad: I summoned the Thai ambassador in London on 19 May to express our serious concern about the recent violence in Bangkok and the excessive use of force by the Thai army. I urged the Thai Government and army to show maximum restraint in their handling of the situation and to avoid further casualties. Along with our EC partners, we are keeping the situation in Thailand under regular review.

Cyprus

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for the level of contribution of British forces to the United Nations forces in Cyprus of the decision by other nations participating in the force to end their contributions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not been informed of any such decision.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been since 1974 towards a settlement in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Progress towards a settlement on Cyprus has been disappointingly slow. However, there are current grounds for optimism; all sides have accepted the ideas endorsed in SCR 750, and the recent round of talks by UN envoys went well.

North Korea

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's Government possess on the nuclear reactor made public by the North Korean nuclear authorities on 14 April.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Copies of an International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) press release about North Korea's nuclear inventory as submitted to the IAEA in accordance with her full-scope safeguards agreement, and a transcript of the press briefing given by IAEA Director-General Hans Blix, have been placed in the Library of the House. The inventory refers to three nuclear reactors. Further details of the information provided by North Korea are held in confidence by the IAEA.

Dependent Territories Committee

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish a dependent territories committee; and if he will publish its terms of reference and composition.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is carrying out a review of how best to conduct relations between Whitehall and the Caribbean Dependent Territories. No decisions have yet been taken.

The results of the review will be announced to Parliament in due course.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Hurd: No public opinion surveys have been commissioned or carried out by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office since 1 November 1991.

Hong Kong

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers he has to increase the opportunities for candidates other than the Governor General to be appointed chancellor of the two universities in Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The relevant laws in Hong Kong provide that the chancellor of the three universities shall be the Governor of Hong Kong.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards Cambodia; and what recent measures he has taken to promote peace in that country.

Mr. Goodlad: As signatories, we support the agreements on a comprehensive political settlement of the Cambodia conflict signed in Paris in October 1991. The United Kingdom played an active part in the negotiations leading up to these agreements.

We will continue to work both through the United Nations and bilaterally to help ensure that the agreements are implemented fully, leading to free and fair elections, a constitution and the formation of a new Cambodian Government next year.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the offer made to him in Cairo by Libyan representatives in relation to the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Libyans have made a number of offers, most recently the offer in the letter to the Secretary General of the United Nations from the Libyan Foreign Minister. Although there has been some movement in the Libyan position, none of these offers has amounted to compliance with Security Council resolution 731 which would need to include the handling over of the two accused for trial in Scotland or the United States.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Non-payment of Fines

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently imprisoned for non-payment of fines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 March 1992 about 330 fine defaulters were held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Filipino Wives

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Filipino wives have been granted entry to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years on grounds of marriage to United Kingdom men; and how many applications have been refused in each of those five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is available only in respect of such wives applying for a settlement entry clearance in the Philippines in the years 1990 and 1991. This information is given in the table.

Annual figures on admissions of wives or fiancees of Filipino nationality are published in table 1 of the annual command papers "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom". Copies of the 1987-90 command papers are in the library. The corresponding figure for 1991 was 530. These admission figures will include Filipino wives and fiancees granted entry clearance other than in the Philippines and any joining non-British husbands settled in the United Kingdom. They do not take account of the year in which the entry clearance was granted.

[1] Including granted on appeal.

Firearms

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the regulation of ownership of air rifles and pistols.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The acquisition, possession and use of air weapons are already strictly regulated by the Firearms Act 1968. In its second annual report (a copy of which is in the Library) the Firearms Consultative Committee, the independent statutory body established to advise Government on the firearms legislation, concluded that the law as it stands is adequate to deal with current levels of misuse. I have no plans to introduce further controls.

Prison Medical Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future structure, establishment and role of the prison medical service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1990 efficiency scrutiny of the prison medical service, now known as the health care service for prisoners, set forth a substantial agenda of proposed reform in the way health services in prisons are organised and delivered. The scrutiny found that the HCSP should be drawn to the centre of prison service management as a whole, but also that a closer alignment with the national health service would be beneficial. This means a wider role for the HCSP and a greater emphasis on health promotion and illness prevention.

We have accepted either fully or in principle virtually all of the 83 scrutiny recommendations, and the process of implementation is underway. The biggest and immediate task arising from the scrutiny is to test out the recommendation that the HCSP should become a purchaser of services through contracts with the NHS (or other providers). As indicated in the consultation paper "Contracting for Prison Health Services", issued last August, the evidence for or against this model can only be produced by pilot projects in selected establishments. The first of these will be ready to start later this year.

The challenge is to provide for prisoners the same standards of health care as is provided by the NHS.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Jack: The Department has carried out five surveys since 1 November 1991 which include questions to test public opinion:

Questions were included in the Gallup Omnibus survey to assess public attitudes towards the police.

A national survey of car users was carried out in January 1991, asking about driver's attitudes to car security and to the gravity of car crime.

A survey of the attitudes of the public to drugs and their prevention was carried out in four of the twenty areas with Home Office drugs prevention teams (Bradford, Glasgow, Nottingham and the London Borough of Lewisham).

Fieldwork for the British Crime Survey was conducted between January and April 1992. Although primarily about respondents' experiences and behaviour, the 1992 survey included questions on attitudes to sentencing and attitudes to the police.

The England and Wales sweep of the second International Crime Survey was carried out at the beginning of 1992. 2,000 adults were asked about experience of crime and opinions on various crime related issues. Several other countries took part.

Mr. Adol Owen-Williams

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the treatment of a United States citizen, Mr. Adol Owen-Williams, by immigration officials at Gatwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have replied to earlier questions from three hon. Members and refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 19 May at column 93. On 20 May, 10 letters had been received from members of the public.

Arrests

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests there were in London during the past year for (a) motoring offences, (b) theft and (c) crimes of violence.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of arrests by offence category is not available centrally. However, the available information for the Metropolitan police district is published in the Report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for 1990 at table 13.4, a copy of which is in the Library. The 1991 report is not yet available.

Police Cells

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted prisoners are held in police cells in the (a) Northumbria, (b) Durham, (c) Cleveland, (d) North Yorkshire and (e) Cumbria police force areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Wednesday 20 May 1992, the following convicted prisoners were held by the force concerned:

	Prisoners
Northumbria	14
Durham	6
Cleveland	2
North Yorkshire	20
Cumbria	19

Knife Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were committed in the Greater London area in each of the last five years in which a knife has been used.

Mr. Jack: Information on the use of knives is not collected centrally. However, information on the number of offences of violence against the person and robbery in which sharp instruments were involved is published annually in the report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. The most recent information available is shown at table 13.3 of the Commissioner's 1990 report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the present law relating to the use of knives in criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: There are already strict controls on the possession of knives in public and the courts have and use stiff penalties to deal with offenders whose crimes have involved the use of a knife. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 will enhance the power of the courts to protect the public from serious harm from a violent offender, by allowing them to impose a longer custodial sentence than would otherwise by justified by the seriousness of the offence.

Parliamentary Boundaries Review

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the electoral quota for the parliamentary boundaries review published on 21 February 1991; and what was the electoral quota for the last review.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The electoral quota applicable to the fourth general review of parliamentary constituencies, announced by the Boundary Commission for England on 21 February 1991, is 69,281.

The comparable figure for the third general review was 65,753.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received about wheel clamping in London.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the last 12 months my Department has received eight letters from members of the public in relation to wheel clamping in London.

Mr. Ghazanfer Ali

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that Mr. Ghazanfer Ali, a Pakistani national, at present detained in Pakistan, who has been granted indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom, does not lose his automatic right to rejoin his wife and family in the United Kingdom if he is unable to re-enter the United Kingdom within two years of leaving the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: If Mr. Ali is out of the United Kingdom for longer than two years he will need to apply for a visa. Any application that Mr. Ali makes will be considered on its merits under the relevant part of the immigration rules.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the organisation and funding of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 18 May at column 10.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a departmental working group to report on electoral registration and connected matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall be undertaking a general review of electoral law and procedures in the light of experience of the general election. This will include meetings with the main political parties and with the local authority associations. In addition, OPCS are currently carrying out research to assess the accuracy of the electoral register using sample information from the 1991 census. The conclusions of the review, together with the results of the research, will assist us in considering whether any changes may need to be made to arrangements for electoral registration.

Dangerous Dogs Act

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 with a view to including Rottweilers within the scope of section 1 of that Act and seek to extend the Act to give mandatory powers to local authorities to stipulate that dogs falling within section 1 of the Act must be kept in secure and screened compounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The powers available under section 1 of the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991 apply only to dogs bred for fighting or having the characteristics of a dog bred for fighting and could not therefore be used in respect of Rottweilers.

Section 2 of the 1991 Act provides a reserve power for the Secretary of State, subject to consultation and the agreement of Parliament, to impose certain conditions on other types of dog considered to represent a serious danger to the public.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to use this power but we shall keep the matter under review in the light of the operation of existing measures for controlling dogs, including section 3 of the 1991 Act. This provides tough penalties against those who allow dogs of any type to become dangerously out of control in a public place. We consider that this provides a powerful incentive to dog owners to exercise proper and responsible control of their dogs.

Women Police Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of women police officers serving in the Metropolitan police who hold senior officer rank; and if he will list the rank that they hold.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of women police officers serving in the Metropolitan police service—in the rank of inspector and above on 31 April is as follows:

	Number
Chief superintendent	5
Superintendent	7
Chief inspector	12
Inspector	35

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun certificates were on issue at 31 December in each year from 1985 in each police force area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The number of shotgun certificates on issue at 31 December in each year from 1986 to 1990 are shown in table 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin numbers 2/88, 33/88, 18/89, 26/90 and 23/91. Copies of these bulletins are in the Library. Figures for 1985 are not readily available by police force area and those for 1991 are not yet available.

Police Special Branches

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he wil now make it his practice to provide substantive answers to questions concerning operational activities of police special branches.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The responsibility for police operational activities rests with chief officers of police.

Anti-discrimination Legislation

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the introduction of comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation in the past six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received no representations in the past six months regarding the introduction of comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation, but have received a number from various bodies and individuals about different aspects of discrimination legislation.

The Commission for Racial Equality published its consultation document on their second review of the Race Relations Act 1976 in July 1991. We will give careful consideration to the formal recommendations which the Commission intends to put forward later this year.

The Equal Opportunities Commission submitted formal proposals to amend the Sex Discrimination Act in March 1988 and wrote to the Home Secretary with revisions in February 1992. These are receiving serious consideration by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment, along with proposals from other bodies.

A number of representations have also been received in the past six months calling for the law to be clarified in relation to discrimination against homosexuals.

Colleagues in the Department of Social Security also received a number of letters in support of the Private Member's Bill introduced by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) which was debated on 31 January 1992.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of Kurdish asylum seekers who have arrived in the United Kingdom since 1988; what is the determination of their cases; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 May 1992]: Information on the ethnic origin of asylum applicants is not recorded but in the period since January 1988 the majority of Turkish applicants, and a considerable proportion of Iraqi applicants, have stated that they are Kurds.

Information on these nationalities is given in tables A and B.

Table A: Applications[1,2] received for asylum in the United Kingdom by Turkish and Iraqi nationals, excluding dependants

[7] These figures are maxima which are likely to overstate the number outstanding because of earlier underrecording of decisions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have entered the United Kingdom from Somalia in each month since January 1989; and what is the determination of their cases.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 May 1992]: Information for the period 1 January 1989 to 30 April 1992 is given in the table. For monthly figures of applications since January 1991 I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the two questions from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 21 May at columns 210-13.

Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the monthly refugee application figures for June 1991 to date and the determination of each applicant.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 20 May 1992]: For monthly figures of applications since January 1991, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling), on 21 May.

Information on decisions made in the second half of 1991 and first four months of 1992 on asylum applications, by nationality, is given in the table.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Quotas

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his Norwegian counterpart about arrangements for fishing quotas.

Mr. Curry: I met Mrs. Petterson, Minister of Fisheries, last year when I discussed a wide range of fisheries matters.

Negotiations between the Community and Norway on fishing quotas for the coming year will commence as usual in the autumn when the scientific advice becomes available.

Farm and Conservation Grants

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was granted to farmers in England and Wales through the farm and conservation grant scheme—heather and woodland regeneration section—in 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: A total of £56,536.

Dolphins

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new initiatives he intends to introduce to protect dolphins.

Mr. Curry: In addition to strongly supporting the recent agreement under the Bonn convention for the conservation of small cetaceans in the North and Baltic seas, the introduction this year of a scheme for voluntary reporting of all incidental captures of marine mammals including cetaceans, the EC-wide limitation on drift net length from 1 June which we secured last year, continuing research on strandings and other aspects of small cetaceans, we are planning further research relevant to incidental capture.

Sea Defences

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how an individual member of the public may gain access to information held by the National Rivers Authority, concerning the state and condition of individual stretches of sea defence structures.

Mr. Curry: In the first instance, members of the public should approach the regional office of the National Rivers Authority for the area concerned.

For the Anglian region, which includes the coastal part of the hon. Member's constituency, the address is Kingfisher house, Goldhay way, Orton Goldhay, Peterborough PE2 02R.

Sunlight (Exposure)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 18 May, Official Report, column 26, if he will consider distributing the Health Education Authority leaflet about exposure to the sun to the farming community.

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to distribute the Health Education Authority leaflet, "Are you dying to get a suntan?", to the farming community.

Copies of the leaflet are held by health education units within district health authorities.

Clenbuterol

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what study has been made, and with what results, of the safety of feeding the drug clenbuterol to beef cattle; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Before any veterinary medicine can be marketed in the United Kingdom, it must first be licensed in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968. Licences are issued only after the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC)—an independent committee of scientists—has satisfied itself that the necessary standards of safety, quality and efficacy have been met. Clenbuterol is legally available in this country as the active ingredient of five prescription-only medicines, licensed for use in treating respiratory ailments in cattle and horses, and as an aid to cattle at the time of calving. These licences are currently being examined by the VPC as part of the ongoing review of veterinary pharmaceutical products.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current capacity of the incinerators in use for the disposal of BSE carcases in the United Kingdom on a weekly basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In England and Wales there is at present enough capacity to incinerate around 1,000 carcases each week. We expect that existing facilities should continue to prove sufficient to incinerate all such carcases.

In Northern Ireland and Scotland, where the incidence of BSE is less, incineration capacity is more than sufficient to handle expected cases.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been paid out in compensation for BSE for each year since the compensation scheme was introduced; how much he is estimating will be paid out for each of the next five years; what is his basis for these estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The amount of BSE compensation paid each year since the scheme was introduced is:

	£ million
1988-89	1
1989-90	4
1990-91	10

[1] provisional

The nature of BSE, with its long incubation period, and the uncertainty of determining how many animals received sufficiently large infective doses before the ruminant feed ban to cause disease, makes the forecasting of expenditure very uncertain. Future trends will be reviewed in connection with the public expenditure survey discussions in the autumn.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Homes

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of houses owned by Scottish Homes and the number of these equipped with central heating.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number of houses owned by Scottish Homes as at 1 May 1992 is 56,430 of which 37,315 are equipped with central heating.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were participating in youth training in Scotland in each month since April 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table.

1991
April	37,065
May	35,797
June	37,213
July	36,285
August	36,714
September	36,865
October	36,749
November	36,912
December	36,744
1992
January	37,842
February	38,045
March[1]	36,583

Local Enterprise Companies

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the budget agreed with each local enterprise company for 1992-93, broken down into the five major expenditure blocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The allocation of resources to local enterprise companies is a matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of the two bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what role the Scottish Environment Department has in promoting energy conservation and efficiency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The main responsibility for promoting energy efficiency in Scotland rests with the Scottish Energy Efficiency Office which forms part of the Scottish Office industry department. The Scottish Office environment department is concerned with promoting energy conservation and efficiency in relation to housing. As an example of this, a total of £9·5 million in additional resources has been made available to Scottish local authorities over the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 to fund projects which demonstrate energy efficiency savings in local authority housing.

My right hon. Friend, by means of the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations, prescribes standards for buildings, including standards for energy conservation, which apply to all new buildings and alterations or conversions (other than those of a very minor nature). The Environmental Department is responsible for promoting these standards and the necessary legislation.

Fisheries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his office has taken to promote Scotland as a fisheries-dependent region for the purposes of the post-1994 reformed funding structure of the common fisheries policy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Officials in the Scottish Office have had regular discussions with the European Commission on fisheries dependent areas, within both the framework of the common fisheries policy mid-term review and the wider reforms of the structural funds. The Commission's proposals on this matter are at a very formative stage. Scotland has one of only seven pilot projects set up by the Commission within the European Community to look at issues such as retraining and alternative employment for fishermen. The project is centred on Macduff. The Commission has also set up a research study to identify fisheries dependent areas in Scotland, which is being carried out by the Sea Fish Industry Authority.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department plans to announce the outcome of the recent review of the disabled facilities grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: What are called disabled facilities grants in England and Wales are not applicable to Scotland. Improvement grants for adapting houses to meet the needs of disabled people have however been available in Scotland for many years. They have not been subject to recent review.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the December 1991 waiting list figures for Scottish hospitals; and if he will undertake to publish waiting list figures on a quarterly basis.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: We shall be moving to publishing waiting list figures on a quarterly basis starting with March 1992 figures.

Scottish Police College

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average daily rate per head which the Scottish Office allows to purchase food for police officers attending the Scottish police college either as recruits, senior officers attending courses or members of staff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 May 1992]: The Scottish office allows £2·19 per head to purchase food for police officers and staff at the Scottish police college.

Prisons

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average daily rate per head which the Scottish Office allows to purchase food for prisoners incarcerated at Her Majesty's prisons which are located in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 May 1992]: The cost of food for prisoners is determined by the weekly ration sheet based on an approved dietary scale. On that basis the estimated average daily food cost per prisoner in Scotland is £1·26 for the current financial year.

Rent Officer Service

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish regular quarterly bulletins of statistics relating to the rent officer service in Scotland equivalent to those available from the Department of the Environment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: On the evidence available to me I do not think that the demand for this material is sufficient to justify a separate quarterly publication as suggested by the hon. Member. But I will look at the possibility of publishing key information in the departmental housing statistical bulletins.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the details of the access agreements reached when the Forestry Commission disposes of its land, including the length of time of an agreement, and amounts that can be paid, and the eligibility of land for such agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The arrangements for continued public access to land sold by the Forestry Commission are fully set out in the Forestry Commission's "Access Guidelines" issued last year. A copy was placed in the Library of the House at the end of September.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the cost to date of the evaluation process of the Scottish bankruptcy system initiated in March 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: No specific figures are available for the cost of the evaluation process.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration the evaluation process initiated in March 1990 has given to the appropriateness of sponsorship by licensed insolvency practitioners of debt helplines or other such means of promulgating insolvency advice to the public.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The sponsorship by insolvency practitioners of helplines is a matter for the ethical committees of the recognised professional bodies to consider. The evaluation of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 did not specifically cover this area.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in the evaluation exercise of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985, the procedures operative in other European countries and in the United States of America and Canada have been considered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: In its review of bankruptcy and insolvency law in Scotland, the Scottish Law Commission considered the procedures operative in a number of other countries and took these into account in framing the recommendations which led to the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985. The Government's evaluation of that Act did not expressly consider practices in other countries.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state for each district council in each year since 1976 (a) the total number of local authority houses allocated to debtors, as defined by section 73(1) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985, and spouses of debtors, (b) the total rent due by debtors or spouses of debtors, (c) the total rent written off or to be written off by local authorities in respect of debtors or spouses of debtors and (d) what specific allowance is taken of such rent arrears in computation of Government funding for local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Information relating to local authority house allocations to debtors, as specified by section 73(1) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985, and to the spouses of such debtors is not held centrally. Nor is information relating to outstanding rent arrears or rent arrears written off in respect of such debtors or the spouses of such debtors. While estimated local authority rent arrears written off as irrecoverable are included in estimated eligible expenditure for the purpose of determining the housing support grant payable to local authorities in any year, no separate estimate is made of the rent arrears written off in respect of such debtors or the spouses of such debtors.

Salmon

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his response to the application for producer organisation status with the extension rule submitted by the Scottish Salmon Growers Association.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1992]: My officials have had discussions with representatives of the industry about the establishment of producer organisations for salmon but have not yet received a formal application for consideration.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the salmon farming industry about Crown Estate rentals; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1992]: There have been no recent discussions about rental payments to the Crown Estate. Rents for salmon farms are being reviewed with effect from 1 January 1992. The Crown Estate's rental arrangements are subject to independent determination by the valuation office and I understand that further representations by the industry will be heard next month.

Shellfish

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he is making available to local authorities to enable environmental health officers to undertake the classification of shellfish harvesting areas to meet the requirements of EC directive 91/492.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Environmental health officers have not been asked to undertake the classification of shellfish harvesting areas. The exercise is being undertaken by my Department's marine laboratory in Aberdeen. The local authority role is limited to the collection of samples and their transmission to the marine laboratory.

Draft regulations for implementing this directive and that for the placing on the market of fishery products (EEC 91/493) will shortly issue for consultation. COSLA has indicated its intention to raise resource implications for local authorities arising from the tasks environmental health authorities will be expected to undertake under both directives. Any representations received will be given careful consideration. It should be borne in mind that substantial resources were provided to local authorities linked to the implementation of the Food Safety Act to which these directives are closely linked.

Sequestration

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will institute an inquiry into the demands placed upon resources of local government as a result of sequestrations in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 May 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to institute such an inquiry.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Packaging

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to reduce wasteful packaging in the retail industry; whether his Department is monitoring the progress of the German regulations relating to secondary packaging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Industry itself has already made good progress in reducing packaging waste—for example, by reducing the weight of packaging materials and using recycled material in new packaging; and a number of major companies have been actively involved with Government in supporting pilot resource recovery schemes. Ministerial colleagues regularly meet representatives of industry, including the retail sector, to discuss further ways in which packaging waste can be reduced. My Department and the Department of the Environment, have commissioned a study to establish whether economic instruments, such as taxes, levies, waste disposal charges and tradeable permits could help us achieve our recycling target. This is due to be completed later this year.

The Government are concerned about the potential for trade restrictions and distortions to competition which could arise as a result of the introduction of unilateral packaging measures in other member states and we have made our views known to the European Commission. The Commission has indicated that it is examining the situation and we have urged them to reach a speedy conclusion.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements he has made for the financing of the Financial Reporting Council beyond the first three years of its life.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The next step is for the Financial Reporting Council to consider the amount and sources of its future funding. I understand that this will be discussed at its next meeting.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to promote the role of internal auditors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: None.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has plans to propose legislation under which the Accounting Standards Board will be required to hold all its meetings in the open.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Financial Reporting Review Panel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has any plans to investigate the operations of the Financial Reporting Review Panel.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. I know of no matters concerning the Financial Reporting Review Panel which would call for such inquiries.

Manufactured Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the deficit or surplus in (a) manufactured trade and (b) invisibles with (i) Japan, (ii) the USA and (iii) Germany, of (1) the United Kingdom, (2) France and (3) (except for (iii)) Germany in each year since 1990.

Mr. Nedham: Information on the balance of trade in manufactured goods is contained in the table. Information on the bilateral balances for invisible trade is not available.

Hallmarking

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to continue the arrangement for the hallmarking of gold, silver and platinum articles by the established British Assay offices; and if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposals on this.

Mr. Leigh: The Government is firmly of the view that the British hallmarking system is the best means of protecting both consumers and traders in the precious metals field. The Commission has indicated that it does not intend to put forward proposals for a harmonised precious metals regime at this stage. We will, however, seek to ensure in any future negotiations on a common system that the principles enshrined in the British hallmarking system are maintained.

Company Reports

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that no company in Wales is prosecuted for a late submission of annual reports to Companies House, if they submitted such a report in the Welsh language within the appropriate time scale.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: New regulations are being introduced on 1 June this year which will enable private limited companies whose registered office is situated in Wales to deliver accounts in Welsh only.

If the Directors of Welsh private limited companies, who produce their accounts in Welsh, deliver them to the Registrar in an acceptable form and within the prescribed period, the question of prosecution does not arise.

Similarly, late filing penalties only apply to companies which deliver their accounts outside the prescribed period.

Directors (Accountability)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to ensure that directors of public companies should be more accountable to their shareholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I welcome the work of the Accounting Standards Board in developing proposals for large companies to include with its annual report and accounts an operating and financial review. I look forward to the contribution of the Cadbury committee which is expected soon.

Cloth (Pentachlorophenol)

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce measures to ban the importation of cloth treated with pentachlorophenol.

Mr. Needham: The Government are conscious of the threat posed to the environment by the use of pentachlorophenols (PCPs) in textile production. However, I do not believe that it would be appropriate to ban imports of cloth treated in this way since there are at present no completely adequate substitutes for PCPs in protecting certain textiles from rotting. The detection of treated cloth at its port of entry would in any case be almost impossible. Nor are we generally able to discriminate against imports arriving from other member states of the European Community.

British Coal Pension Funds

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present value of the pension funds held for emoployees of British Coal or their dependants; and if he will announce the arrangements to be made to protect both the benefits and the funds themselves following privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 20 May to the Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans), Official Report, col. 156. The present values of the pension funds are a matter for the trustees of those pension funds.

Nuclear Electric (Support)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the total value of the support provided for Nuclear Electric has been since this business was formed.

Mr. Eggar: In each of 1990-91 and 1991-92 the nuclear industry received approximately £1·25 billion through the fossil fuel levy. The allocation of this income between Nuclear Electric plc, British Nuclear Fuels Limited and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is commercially confidential.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the working lifespan of a gas-fired power generating station constructed in 1992; and what steps he is taking to ensure that adequate supplies of gas at reasonable prices will be available throughout the period involved.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's aim is a competitive market within which the lifespan of individual power stations and the arrangements for fuelling them are matters for their operators.

In the Government's observations on the Fourth Report of the Energy Select Committee (Session 1989-90), "The Cost of Nuclear Power", (a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House) the lifetime of a combined cycle gas turbine power station was assumed to be between 20 and 40 years.

United Kingdom offshore gas reserves alone are sufficient to meet likely levels of United Kingdom demand for gas, including power generation, well beyond the turn of the century.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken towards the fulfilment of the undertaking to hold a creditors' meeting in connection with the BCCI liquidation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The joint liquidators of BCCI have informed my officials that they have set up a working party to consider how the difficulties of organising an effective meeting under section 141 of the Insolvency Act 1986 may be overcome. The joint liquidators have also indicated that the working party's preliminary report will be available shortly.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of meetings between his officials and the liquidators of BCCI on (a) the costs of the liquidation, and the breakdown of the costs and (b) the number of former customers of BCCI who have been placed into receivership by the liquidators.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cost of the liquidation of BCCI are a matter for the court. The appointment of administrative receivers to companies who were former customers of BCCI is not a matter which requires reference to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the copy sent to him of the letter to the liquidators from Messrs Zaiwalla concerning the liquidators' injunction against Mr. Masihur Raham, the former financial controller of BCCI; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The relevant parts of my Department have no record of the receipt of any such letter.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the companies or individuals who have approached him about the privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: A number of companies and individuals have approached me about the privatisation of the coal industry including British Coal and the British Association of Colliery Management.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will make public details of all communications he receives from the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission on the safety consequences of coal privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: Yes.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he first consulted the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission about the safety consequences of coal privatisation.

Mr. Eggar: I wrote to the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission on 19 May formally to seek the commission's advice on the safety implications of coal privatisation.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consult the unions in the mining industry to seek their views on the safety consequences of the privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Eggar: I have already written to the coal industry trade unions seeking their views on all aspects of privatisation.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the phase out strategy for the fast reactor programme at the nuclear power development establishment at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: The nuclear industry have made a proposal to extend the life of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay by three years from the announced closure of March 1994 until March 1997. I am currently considering their proposal.

Dolphins

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on the GATT panel conclusions on the United States embargoes on tuna caught by methods that are not dolphin-safe.

Mr. Needham: The European Commission is handling the matter within the GATT on behalf of the Community. The United Kingdom supports the Commission in urging the United States to adopt the findings of the GATT panel report on the United States tuna embargoes.

RECHAR

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what payments have been made to local authorities under the RECHAR scheme during 1992; and what further payments are expected to be made during this year.

Mr. Sainsbury: No payments have been made so far under the RECHAR programmes. The RECHAR programme monitoring committees will soon be able to meet consider applications for grants. Payments to local authorities and others, in respect of projects selected for grant, will follow in accordance with the normal structural funds procedures.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects RECHAR monies to be released to qualifying local authorities.

Mr. Sainsbury: The RECHAR programme monitoring committees will soon be able to meet to consider applications for grants. Payments to local authorities and others, in respect of projects selected for grant, will follow in accordance with the normal structural funds procedures.

Waste Paper

Mr. Paice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress his Department is making concerning the expected shortfall in supply of waste paper to United Kingdom mills.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 19 May 1992]: We are not aware of an expected shortfall in the supply of waste paper to United Kingdom mills. Sourcing of raw materials is a matter for industry.

Trading Figures

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the trading figures between the United Kingdom and Liberia for each of the past five years; and what Export Credits Guarantee Department rating that country is given.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 May 1992]: Figures for United Kingdom/Liberia trade for the last five years are:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
United Kingdom exports	13·5	11·6	15·1	8·6	8·8
United Kingdom imports	7·3	9·5	12·7	13·2	0·9
Trade balance	+6·2	+2·1	+2·4	−4·6	+7·9

ECGD medium-term cover (ie for business on credit terms of two years or more) is not available for Liberia.

Export credit cover for short term business (ie generally on credit of up to 180 days) became the responsibility of the private sector in December 1991.

Companies (South African Interests)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations the Department of Trade and Industry has held on the future of the EC code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa (a) with other EC Governments and (b) others; what have been the results of those consultations; and what has been the policy of Her Majesty's Government in these consultations.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 21 May 1992]: In the light of the recent political changes in South Africa, the EC Presidency has initiated discussions on the future of the code of conduct and its reporting requirements. We are consulting the main reporting companies as part of this reassessment and will reach a view as to the Government's future policy in the light of this.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade why publication of the annual summary of United Kingdom companies' responses under the EC code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa has been delayed; and when it will be published.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The normal timetable for the presentation to Parliament of this year's annual summary of United Kingdom companies' responses under the EC code of conduct was delayed because of the Dissolution of Parliament on 16 March. The summary will be presented soon.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy in respect of encouraging companies to respond to the EC code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa for the period ending 30 June.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The Government have always encouraged companies to comply with the reporting requirements of the EC code of conduct, while recognising that compliance is voluntary.

North Korea

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the outcome of the recent visit to North Korea by the Secretary-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency's, in regard to the application of nuclear safeguards, pursuant to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The International Atomic Energy Agency has made a report in the form of a press release on this visit. A copy of the press release has been placed in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training and youth training places were available in Barrow-in-Furness for each financial year since 1987; and what number will be available during 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

At the end of 1991-92 financial year, there were approximately 3,600 young people on YT and 1,200 people on ET in the Cumbria TEC area, of which Barrow-in-Furness is a part.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of those completing employment training and youth training schemes in Barrow-in-Furness secured full-time employment in each of the years from 1987 onwards.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following table provides all the information available for Barrow-in-Furness and for the Cumbria TEC area which includes Barrow-in-Furness.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional training schemes in Barrow and Furness are being proposed by his Department for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to help those employees made redundant from VSEL secure new employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Cumbria training and enterprise council (TEC) is responsible for training in Barrow and Furness.

The chief executive of Cumbria TEC has already contacted the hon. Member to arrange a meeting at which he will brief the hon. Member on the efforts the TEC has made to create opportunities for the potential and present work force of Barrow.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each local enterprise company area in Scotland and for Scotland and Great Britain as a whole, for the year 1990-91, the total costs of provision of employment training, and the shares going to (a) trainees and (b) training providers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total cost of employment training in 1990-91 was £1,076 million in Great Britain, of which £527 million was paid to trainees in allowances. It is not possible to identify separately the amounts paid to training providers.

Costs for 1990-91 cannot be identified separately for Scotland.

Local enterprise companies (LECS) did not become operational until 1 April 1991; therefore, expenditure information by LEC area for 1990-91 is not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) chairman and (b) directors of TECs have resigned since they were set up.

Mr. McLoughlin: There has been a turnover of 26 chairmen and 398 directors since TECs were set up.

Wages

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will provide a breakdown (a) by wages inspectorate division and (b) by wages councils, of establishments checked, and those found to be contravening wages council legislation in 1991, in the same format as the replies given on 14 March 1990, Official Report, columns 252-58, and 24 April 1990, Official Report, columns 177-82.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) today. The additional information is provided in the tables:

Breach of Contract

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will use her power in section 131 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and confer jurisdiction on industrial tribunals to deal with claims for breach of contract.

Mr. McLoughlin: As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education, when he was Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, announced on 22 October last year, the power in section 131 has proved inadequate and the Government propose to amend the relevant provisions at the earliest opportunity to enable appropriate jurisdiction to be conferred on industrial tribunals.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the total expenditure by her Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if she will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Expenditure (£ million)
1986-87	1·080
1987-88	1·014
1988-89	3·185
1989-90	3·331
1990-91	3·507

Figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are for DE information division only. Figures for training agency information services branch are not available.

Figures for 1988-89 represent total expenditure incurred by DE information division and training agency information services branch. The two merged to form DE information branch in November 1989 and figures from 1989-90 onwards represent expenditure by DE information branch.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment has been made of the effect of deregulation of Sunday trading hours on shopworkers' rights to attend places of worship, and to spend Sundays with their families.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have made clear their commitment to reform the Sunday trading laws and intends to honour this as soon as the question of the compatibility of the current law with European law is clear. The decision of the European Court of Justice, which is considering this matter, is expected in the autumn.

The position of shopworkers will, of course, be one of a number of issues to be taken into account when we consider how best to go forward on Sunday trading as a whole.

Electrical Equipment Certification Service

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent consultation has taken place with employees and their representatives regarding the future of the electrical equipment certification service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive are consulting employees and their representatives on a report, commissioned by the executive from independent consultants, on the future organisation and status of the Electrical Equipment Certification Service (EECS); the executive will form a view on any changes to the service in the light of these and other consultations.

Medicopharma UK

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether former employees of Medicopharma UK can expect to receive their company redundancy payments following the inquiry by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the acquisition of the company by AAH Holdings plc.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statutory redundancy entitlements are the responsibility of the employer, unless he is insolvent or otherwise unable to make the payments. I understand that this employer intends to meet all claims.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions she has had with the National Council for Vocational Qualifications regarding the promotion of national vocational qualifications for young people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications has developed a communications strategy for national vocational qualifications which brings together all those involved, including the Government as appropriate. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will have her first meeting with the chairman of the council, Sir Bryan Nicholson, next month.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Construction Industry Training Board in promoting national vocational qualifications; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am pleased to record that the Construction Industry Training Board has produced a wide range of occupational standards as a basis for national vocational qualifications. The board has agreed a comprehensive plan to promote the use of these qualifications both within the building and civil engineering sectors and with other employers.

Child Care

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how and when she proposes to introduce the grant for after-school child care; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government see out-of-school child care as being particularly important to working mothers and have made a commitment to introduce a grant to be paid through TECs, to help set up out of school provision. A number of key issues have to be decided. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to discuss these with the women's issues working group, which she announced on 21 May. It is important that the provision is of good quality and meets the needs of both parents and children. We intend to introduce the grant as quickly as is consistent with that requirement.

Tuesday 2 June 1992

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of the total work force in the Law Officers' departments is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people in those departments; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Neither the legal secretariat to the Law Officers nor the Serious Fraud Office has any officers who are registered as disabled. Some 3·5 per cent. of the total work force in the Serious Fraud Office is composed of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to be registered.

In the Crown prosecution service 0·7 per cent. of established staff—5,318·5 staff as at 1 June 1991—were registered disabled. The CPS also employs staff with disabilities who are not registered, but the numbers are not readily available.

In the Treasury Solicitor's Department 2 per cent. of the established staff of 500 as at 1 June 1991 were registered disabled.

Each of the Law Officers' departments is an equal opportunities employer. Moreover, the CPS will shortly introduce a programme for action on the disabled which will include guidance and good practices on the recruitment and retention of disabled people.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the total tonnage of all meat products despatched to each CIS republic separately from the United Kingdom under all aid programmes has been (a) delivered to warehouses in former CIS republics, (b) delivered to retail outlets ready for sale and (c) delivered to caring and educational institutions for free distribution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Russia is the only CIS republic to have received meat products from the United Kingdom under an aid programme. Of the total of 5,200 tonnes of beef delivered, approximately one third went to meat processing factories, one third to retail outlets—supermarkets—and one third to special institutions—hospitals, schools and orphanages.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what moneys have been spent on providing know-how to persons residing permanently in the CIS on the subject of farm product and retail food distribution.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Food distribution is one of four priority areas identified for assistance under the Government's know-how fund for the former Soviet Union. In Russia alone we have already provided £1·022 million as technical assistance to support Feed Aid, food processing and distribution, plus about £1 million for a study of bread production in Moscow. A further £1·6 million has been earmarked for food-related projects and several further major food production and distribution proposals are currently under consideration.

In Ukraine, we have approved a £2·5 million food marketing and distribution project. Expenditure to date is £0·075 million. Also under way is a £0·460 million radioactivity food screening project, of which £0·1 million has been spent.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total tonnage of all meat products despatched to CIS states from the United Kingdom under all aid programmes in the last six months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A total of 5,200 tonnes of beef were despatched to Russia from the United Kingdom under all aid programmes during the last six months. No deliveries were made to other CIS states.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many monitors from EC countries have been stationed in each of the former CIS republics, with the responsibility for monitoring meat distribution in each of the last six months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An EC task force of some 50 personnel from the member states has been based in Russia since the end of January, monitoring the transport and distribution of EC humanitarian food supplies. The United Kingdom has supplied six personnel at any time. In other states of the former Soviet Union, the Commission has arranged for European non-governmental organisations to monitor delivery and distribution.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United Nations development programme about aid to Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The staff of the British mission in Phnom Penh and in the ODA's regional office in Bangkok are in regular contact with UNDP officials about aid priorities in Cambodia. We attend the regular donor co-ordination meetings convened by the UNDP in Phnom Penh to underpin the efforts of the UN aid co-ordinator, Mr. Bernander; we have welcomed the UNDP's role in providing technical support to the Supreme National Council; and through a seconded ODA official we have contributed to the UNDP's "Comprehensive Paper on Rehabilitation Needs of Cambodia". The UNDP is one of ODA's partners in co-financing a health planning project in Phnom Penh and other possibilities for co-operation have been discussed.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assistance in personnel and aid has been given to Cambodia in each year since 1979; and what assistance is planned for the current year;

(2) if he will list the ODA personnel currently serving in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table shows disbursements of United Kingdom gross bilateral aid to Cambodia for the years 1979 to 1990.

Gross bilateral aid to Cambodia 1979-90 (£'000)

	Financial Aid (including debt relief)	Technical co-operation	Total
1979	703	—	703
1980	486	—	486
1981	110	—	110
1982	18	—	18

1985	18	—	18
1986	18	—	18
1987	18	—	18
1988	18	100	118
1989	18	283	302
1990	—	110	110

In addition, during this period £1·25 million was allocated to support programmes in Cambodia carried out by the United Nations Children Fund, the World Food Programme and the World Health Organisation; and nearly £15 million has been committed for assistance for refugees on the Thai-Cambodian border.

Firm expenditure figures are not yet available for 1991 and 1992, but, since the signing of the Paris peace accords in October 1991, the United Kingdom has granted an additional £750,000 to the World Food Programme for food pre-positioning for returnees and for the internally displaced; made payments of £2 million to the UNHCR in support of the repatriation programme; and has met a further £180,000 of the cost of bridge strengthening and provision along the repatriation route. Since January 1991 some £950,000 has been spent on the joint funding scheme in support of non-governmental organisations in Cambodia in the health, education, water supply and other priority sectors.

In the current financial year, further support for non-governmental organisations activity is planned and we are developing a significant programme of bilateral country assistance focused on health, water supply, English language training and some essential infrastructural improvements.

Between 1979 and the Paris peace accords, assistance with personnel was provided indirectly through our support for NGOs and the multilateral agencies.

Two permanent members of ODA's staff are currently on secondment in Cambodia. One is the deputy head of the British mission, with special responsibility for development matters. The other is ODA's senior health and population adviser. She is seconded to the World Health Organisation and is leading a health planning and management team in the Ministry of Health in Phnom Penh.

In addition, we expect more than 20 technical experts financed by the ODA to be undertaking short and long-term assignments in Cambodia during the course of this year in the fields of English language training, water use and development, inland fisheries, urban planning and support to small scale industry. We are also fully funding a repatriation adviser working with the International Federation of the Red Cross in support of the UNHCR repatriation effort.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the Government of Thailand and (b) the Governments of other countries about deforestation in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the co-ordination arrangements between donors, the United Kingdom's main focus in Cambodia is on health, water use and development, English language training, and bridge repair to assist repatriation. Forestry is not a sector of concentration for the United Kingdom in Cambodia. However, deforestation and other environmental dangers are critical issues for the development of Cambodia; and ODA officials in Phnom Penh have participated in discussions with the Supreme National Council and other country representatives, including Thai officials, at which these issues have been raised. We have urged EC officials to tackle forestry and environmental protection problems in the next tranche of EC assistance. We expect environmental concerns to play a prominent part in the forthcoming co-ordination meeting in Tokyo on 22 and 23 June at which the United Kingdom will be represented at ministerial level.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of health needs in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Malaria is considered the major health problem in Cambodia, with some 500,000 cases per year resulting in between 5,000 and 10,000 deaths. Other serious problems are tuberculosis; diarrhoeal and other childhood communicable diseases; undernutrition and micronutrient deficiency; pregnancy-related problems; and trauma.

In the short term, the immediate needs are adequate supplies of potable water, food and essential medicines and equipment; a programme of child immunisation; and the transfer of basic health skills. In the longer term, it will be essential to rebuild and strengthen the health service system.

In response to these needs, the United Kingdom is co-funding the WHO's three year anti-malaria programme in-country; ODA has seconded a senior health and population adviser to a two-year WHO assignment in the Cambodian Ministry of Health; and assistance to the water sector is a priority in the United Kingdom bilateral programme to Cambodia.

Guatemala

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, United Nations agencies and the Overseas Development Administration bilaterally, separately provide to Guatemala.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Guatemala has been in non-accrual status—default with the World bank—since 1990 because of loan arrears. The Guatemalan Government have indicated their intention fully to clear their arrears to the bank, and discussions are in progress about this. Parallel discussions with the IMF on the possible use of resources under the IMF standby arrangement are continuing.

The various United Nations agencies operate different systems of financial control and it is not possible to provide reliable figures on an annual country basis.

There is no British bilateral aid programme at present. We have agreed to provide £22·5 million of grant aid for a joint infrastructure project, yet to be agreed, to support the development of full and normal relations between Belize and Guatemala. A total of £15 million will be spent in Guatemala.

Southern Africa (Drought)

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest assessment of the consequences of the drought in southern Africa; and what plans there are to provide further unilateral and multilateral British aid.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The most comprehensive assessment of the consequences of the drought is to be found in the appeal document just issued jointly by the United Nations and the Southern African development co-ordination conference—SADCC. This indicates that up to 130 million people may be affected, with cereal production at less than half the normal level and an import requirement of some 11·6 million tonnes. We have already pledged some £30 million in additional drought-related assistance and will continue to play a full and active part in the international response to the drought, including attendance by my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development at a UN/SADCC conference in Geneva on 1 and 2 June.

Zimbabwe and Zambia

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means and through what agencies the expenditure of £5 million for Zimbabwe and £5 million for Zambia will be spent; and what restrictions have been applied to the use of these moneys respectively.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The additional balance of payments aid for Zambia and Zimbabwe, announced on 4 March and 29 April in response to the drought and totalling £10 million and 7·5 million respectively, is being made available by way of reimbursement of completed and satisfactorily documented fuel oil transactions subject to undertakings that equivalent sums will be allocated to purchase food or other drought-related goods.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to increase the amount of grant aid to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As I stated in my written reply of 24 July 1991 to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon), consideration of major new aid commitments to Sri Lanka was delayed following the expulsion of the British high commissioner last year. This policy remains under review.

Aid Budget

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set a timetable for Britain's overseas aid budget to reach the UN target of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. The Government have stated on many occasions that, while they accept the target and are providing for real-terms increases in the aid programme, they are not prepared to set down a timetable.

Zaire

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Zaire concerning human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Zairean Government are fully aware of the importance the United Kingdom attaches to human rights. Together with EC partners, we have made regular representations to the Zaireans on the internal political situation in Zaire, including the need for democratic reform and respect for human rights.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of Sierra Leone concerning human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have stressed to Sierra Leone's National Provisional Ruling Council in Freetown the importance we attach to human rights, in particular that those detained following the coup be released or properly charged. We have also asked them to honour their commitment to return Sierra Leone to multiparty democracy as soon as possible.

Bangladesh

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the appeal made in early April by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for donors to meet an increased requirement for $27·5 million to aid 150,000 additional refugees arrived in Bangladesh.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees appealed to the international community on 9 March 1992. The United Kingdom responded on 24 March with a contribution of £1 million, the largest single contribution made to this appeal. Our contribution via the EC amounts to about £50,000 and we have additionally responded to a Red Cross appeal with a further £200,000.

Tropical Rainforests

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to encourage a reduction in the deforestation of the tropical rainforests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA has more than 200 forestry projects under way or in preparation, at a cost of over £158 million to the aid programme. We are working for a statement of principles on the sustainable management of the world's forests to be agreed at the UN conference on environment and development and a legally binding agreement thereafter. We take a leading role in promoting sustainable forest use in international fora such as the International Tropical Timber Organisation and the tropical forest action programme.

Kurdistan

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the Overseas Development Administration has directly spent on its own activities in Iraqi Kurdistan in the month of April; and what is the projected figure for May 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In 1991-92 we gave a total of £51·5 million for humanitarian relief to Iraq, of which £824,000 was provided in grants to British and Kurdish non-governmental organisations for relief work in northern Iraq. Some of this money is still being spent. Expenditure figures for April and May 1992 are not available. In May we provided a further £600,000 towards the cost of UN guards in Iraq.

RMS St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the tender documents for the new RMS St. Helena contract.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The tender documents are not expected to be issued before 5 June. A copy will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those additional areas of policy which are to be subject to majority voting under the Maastricht treaty, setting out an explanatory memorandum in each case.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the detailed answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 20 May to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing).

A memorandum analysing the provisions of the Maastricht treaty and their implications for the United Kingdom in the Community was submitted to the Foreign Affairs Committee enquiry into "Europe after Maastricht". This memorandum has been published by HMSO and is available in the Library of the House.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The details are as follows.

Total expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on press and public relations from 1983-84 to 1990-91, latest estimates for 1991-92 and budget provisions for 1992-93 are (£ million)

Note;

Figures for the period before 1983-84 are not available on a comparable basis.

Thailand

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Thailand about human rights abuses there.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 22 May, at column 310.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office employs 48 registered disabled persons—RDPs—with 24 in the diplomatic wing—1·1 per cent. of its home civil service payroll or 0·4 per cent. of its total work force—and 24 in the Overseas Development Administration, 1·9 per cent. of its total work force.

Recent steps to encourage the employment of disabled people include use of the disability logo; placing recruitment advertising in publications aimed specifically at people with disabilities; interviewing all RDPs who meet the sift criteria; establishing a budget for accommodation changes and the purchase of equipment; and giving disabled staff access to positive action and development training courses run specifically for people with disabilities.

Sea Levels

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what examination has been made of the susceptibility of United Kingdom protectorates in the southern hemisphere to sea level rises arising from global warming.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has contributed to the work of the coastal zone management group of the intergovernmental panel on climate change which is undertaking studies on the vulnerability of small island and low-lying states to sea-level rise. The United Kingdom also contributes to the trust fund of the IPCC to enable developing countries to play a full part in this work.

In addition, the Overseas Development Administration has funded a preliminary study of the effects of sea level rise for the Organisation of Eastern Caribbean States. The results of this work were presented at the IPCC workshop on "The Rising Challenge of the Sea" held in Venezuela in March 1992.

Diplomatic Services

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which countries the United Kingdom provides diplomatic services for the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government have agreed to provide consular protection to Irish nationals in countries where the Republic of Ireland is not represented.

Croat and Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom, alone or in conjunction with the other member states of the European Community, has or intends to provide assistance to Slovenia to assist it in dealing with the Croat and Bosnian refugees in Slovenia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has since November 1991 given £3·3 million bilaterally and £6·4 million through the EC in humanitarian aid to the former Yugoslavia. This money has been allocated primarily to the International Committee of the Red Cross and to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for work in all the republics of the former Yugoslavia according to need.

Gulf Ecology

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters in regard to progress made in ecological restoration of the desert and the Gulf waters and shores were discussed during his recent visit to Kuwait to meet Ministers of the Gulf Co-operation Council.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No such discussions took place during my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' visit to Kuwait.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—A Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Goodlad: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by HM Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of the prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Goodlad: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later. To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their sub-contractors, all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the sub-contractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the strengthening of the inspection procedures in the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and what would be the financial implications thereof.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With European partners we put forward a list of proposed improvements to International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards, including greater use of special inspections, in September 1991. We welcome the recent reaffirmation by the board of governors of the IAEA of the agency's right to conduct such inspections. Extending safegurds activities will have financial implications. Within the total provision for safeguards in the agency's draft budget for 1993-94 some 500,000 US dollars are allocated for a review and analysis of background information relevant to safeguards activities, including special inspections.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the actions that may be taken against a state that violates its obligations under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under article XIIC of the IAEA statute, the IAEA board of governors is required to report any state which violates its safeguards obligations under the NPT to the Security Council and general assembly. It is then for the Security Council to decide on appropriate action—as it has done with Iraq. Should the state in question not take full corrective action within a reasonable time, the board of governors may curtail or suspend assistance being provided to it by the agency or by an IAEA member, and call for the return of materials and equipment. The agency may also suspend any non-complying member from the exercise of the privileges and rights of membership.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the effect of article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with regard to the number of strategic nuclear warheads that the United Kingdom may deploy above the number presently deployed on Polaris;

(2) what are the implications for the United Kingdom's treaty obligations under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of the deployment of a United Kingdom tactical air-to-surface missile;

(3) what are the impllications for the United Kingdom's treaty obligations under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to Her Majesty's Government's decision to raise the maximum level of warhead deployment of the strategic nuclear force with the introduction of the Trident missile system.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is the Government's policy to maintain the minimum nuclear capability necessary to ensure effective deterrence. This is consistent with the United Kingdom's obligations under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards a greater use of special inspection procedures under the existing terms of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have long advocated greater use of special inspections. With European partners, we put forward a list of proposed improvements to IAEA safeguards, including greater use of special inspections, in September 1991. We welcome the recent reaffirmation by the board of governors of the IAEA of the agency's right to conduct such inspections.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what status his Department accords the declarations of intent included in the preamble to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a matter of law, the substantive articles of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons are binding upon states parties. The declarations of intent contained in the preamble to the treaty are not, but reflect the long term aspirations of the signatories. The Government attach great importance to them.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is his Department's policy towards a conditional moratorium on underground nuclear tests;

(2) what are the implications for the United Kingdom's policy towards nuclear testing of France's decision to undertake a moratorium on all nuclear tests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear in a written answer on 12 May, at column 90, we have a continuing requirement to sustain a minimum programme of nuclear tests to maintain the effectiveness and safety of our nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations his Department will make to the Russian Government to secure an extension of Russia's one-year moratorium on nuclear tests;

(2) what assessment he has made of the security implications for the United Kingdom of the Russian moratorium on nuclear tests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Russia's nuclear testing requirements are a matter for the Russian Government. There are no immediate implications for United Kingdom policy.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the conducting of an underground nuclear weapons test by any country other than those of the permanent five of the United Nations Security Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our policy is to support the non-proliferation treaty, which is the cornerstone of the international nuclear non-proliferation regime.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the negotiations of a global ban on all sub-strategic nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our NATO allies believe a sub-strategic nuclear deterrent remains necessary to provide the essential link between conventional and strategic nuclear forces.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards the strengthening of the obligations imposed upon nuclear suppliers under the terms of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We exercise our supplier obligations under the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons through our membership of the Zangger committee. We were a founder member of this committee, provide its secretariat and play an active role in its work. We are a strong supporter of strict supplier controls and are also members of the nuclear suppliers' group. Last September we adopted a policy of full-scope safeguards as a condition of nuclear supply.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's policy towards banning all nuclear tests by all potential nuclear armed adversaries of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom remains committed to a comprehensive test ban—CTB—as a long-term goal. However, we have continuing requirement to sustain a minimum programme of nuclear tests, and problems of effectively verifying a CTB remain. Progress can therefore be made only on a step-by-step basis.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will accept (a) a testing quota or (b) a lower threshold limit on the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons testing programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom's nuclear test programme is the minimum necessary to ensure the safety and effectiveness of our nuclear deterrent. Our requirements are kept under review.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Total expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on advertising and other promotional material for the years 1979-80 to 1991-92, and latest estimates for 1992-93 are:

	Foreign and Commonwealth Office
	Diplomatic wing (£)	Overseas Development Aid wing (£)
1979-80	100,266	214,739
1980-81	116,532	145,697
1981-82	162,998	207,964
1982-83	229,711	135,506
1983-84	205,247	252,691
1984-85	149,932	234,050
1985-86	160,535	271,084
1986-87	335,754	228,347
1987-88	195,000	351,000
1988-89	289,184	689,631
1989-90	395,842	1,066,447
1990-91	926,610	902,000
1991-92	755,000	1,031,000
1992-93	754,000	1,057,000

These figures cannot be disaggregated to identify the medium used without incurring disproportionate cost.

Medjugorje

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Serbian Government about the bombing of Medjugorje; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We supported UN Resolution 752 which demanded that all concerned should stop the fighting in Bosnia and Herzegovina immediately.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has made to the Croatian Government following attacks against the withdrawing Yugoslav Federal Army on 20 and 21 May; if he will seek assurances that Croatian forces will allow the Yugoslav Federal Army to retire to Serbia unmolested; and what guarantee he will require from the Croatian Government for the remaining Serbian population of Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We deplore all acts of violence in Croatia, particularly those which contravene agreements with the UN. It is an essential part of the agreement covering the deployment of the UN protection force that the JNA should withdraw from the protected areas. We are scrutinising the new legislation passed on 8 May to ascertain whether it provides the necessary guarantees for minorities.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Turkish Cypriots have been consulted about the application of Cyprus to join the European Community; whether the Turkish Cypriots support this application; and whether the United Kingdom supports this application.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council of Ministers referred the application to the Commission for opinion in September 1990. We understand that Commission officials will consult acknowledged leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community. We will study the Commission's opinion carefully before reaching conclusions.

Bosnia

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government will make to the Bosnian Government regarding the drafting of a new constitution and specifically on the future right of secession and self-determination.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We strongly support the efforts of Lord Carrington and Ambassador Cutileiro to draw up constitutional arrangements acceptable to all parties. We look forward to the speedy resumption of these talks.

Croatia

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the Croatian Government regarding the recruitment of British mercenaries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have seen media reports that British citizens are fighting as mercenaries in Croatia. We deplore any foreign encouragement of this tragic conflict.

European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in respect to the proposed amendments to the treaty of Rome proposed in title II of the treaty on European union, he will place in the Library a document showing for each of the current articles proposed to be amended, using distinctive type and deletion marks respectively, the changes proposed to each relevant article.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Title II of the treaty on European union, when read against the treaty of Rome, makes clear how the latter treaty is to be amended: new articles are to be "inserted", certain articles are to be "repealed" and articles which are to be amended are "replaced" by new versions of the existing articles. The last category contains all the amendments to which the hon. Member refers. As was explained by my right hon. Friend in a letter to the hon. Member on 18 May, the Government do not intend to publish a consolidated version of the treaty of Rome as amended by the treaty on European union prior to the latter's entry into force. A copy of the letter was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify those other provisions of the treaty on European union, in the Cm. 1934 version, other than titles II, III and IV, which relate to those titles.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The question raised by the hon. Member is covered in the notes on clauses relating to the European Communities (Amendment) Bill which are available in the Vote Office.

British Embassies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those British embassies which have desk-top communications for (a) their own purposes and (b) commercial and trade purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: Of the 230 British overseas posts where there are resident United Kingdom-based staff, all but 15 have computer systems which can be used both for their own internal purposes and to store and process commercial and trade data.

Diplomatic Services

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which countries the United Kingdom provides diplomatic services for other European Community nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under an informal arrangement made in 1985, the diplomatic missions of European Community member states may provide consular assistance to unrepresented EC nationals in non-Community countries.

Dependent Territories

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the performance monitoring organisations used by United Kingdom dependent territories to monitor the performance of their equity investment advisers and the performance of their equity investment.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Responsibility for monitoring the performance of the investments and investments advisers of the United Kingdom's dependent territories rests with the Minister of Finance, or equivalent official, of each territory. These investments are also subject to scrutiny by an officer responsible for the public audit of each territory, and by the legislature or equivalent body, as appropriate.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a league table showing the percentage increase or decrease of each of the dependent territories' equity investments over the last five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: This information is not centrally recorded. It would incur a disproportionate cost to collate it.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all recipients of licences to fish within the 12-mile limit off St. Helena.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All recipients of licences are local St. Helena boat owners. Twenty-seven licences have been issued in 1992 of which 18 are for full-time fishing, five for occasional fishing and four for sport.

I shall write shortly to the hon. Member with a full list of the holders of the licences.

ENVIRONMENT

Private Lettings

Mr. Raymford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give further details of the nature of the proposed rent-a-room scheme and his estimate of the number of new lettings which might be brought into existence through this scheme in a full year.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce more tax advantages for private lettings.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The Conservative election manifesto included an undertaking to introduce a new 'rent a room' scheme under which home owners will be able to let rooms to lodgers without having to pay tax on the rent they receive. This matter is under consideration.

Marsham Street Premises

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, or give reference to any document describing, the full reasons why it is considered the best value for money to demolish the Government premises in Marsham street; what was the date of their completion; and what necessary work, and approximate cost, would be required to render them fit for office reoccupation.

Mr. Howard: The Government building at 2 Marsham street, which was first occupied in 1970, is in need of major repair. Because of the scale of necessary remedial work, a wide range of alternative options was reviewed, based on advice from Arup Associates. The options ranged from immediate repairs, through various levels of refurbishment to demolition. Demolition proved to be the best value for money, when the overall costs of each option were compared.

The repair option with the lowest initial cost consisted primarily of remedial work to concrete, replacement of windows and decoration of affected areas. It would involve a substantial programme of decanting staff for several years and would cost about £50 million, over and above routine maintenance and running costs. This would do no more than keep the building going. Similar expenditure and further decanting would be required within 10 years to replace obsolete services and carry out further concrete repairs. Upgrading the building to allow greater use of modern office technology, more efficient energy consumption and better use of space would be more expensive still.

Ozone-depleting Chemicals

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the international meeting of Government experts held in Geneva during April on strategies to accelerate the phase out of ozone-depleting chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: This meeting provided the opportunity for parties to the Montreal protocol to propose changes to the protocol which might be agreed at the fourth meeting of the parties, to be held in November in Copenhagen. Proposals put forward included those from the EC, on which the Government provided explanatory memorandum 5162/92 on 21 May 1992. Substantive discussion of the various changes proposed will take place at the next meeting, to be held next month in Geneva.

Housing Associations

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing his estimate of the percentage of the net income of housing association tenants which would on average be taken by their rent, broken down on a regional basis in each of the years from 1979 to 1991.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not compile this information.

Information is, however, available from the National Federation of Housing Associations. The NFHA collects information relating to new housing association tenancies, and has published regional data on weekly rent as a percentage of weekly income in its CORE quarterly bulletin since the end of 1989.

The relevant copies of the bulletin are in the House of Commons Library.

London Docklands

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table indicating, for each year since 1981, at current prices, the amount of money the Government have provided for all private investors in London docklands, in terms of (a) direct subsidies, (b) tax allowances, (c) rates relief and (d) discounted land sales.

Mr. Redwood: Figures relating to direct subsidies (a) and to rate relief (c) are as follows:

£ thousands

	(a) Direct subsidies	(c) Rate relief
1981-82	215	—
1982-83	351	2,091
1983-84	304	2,401
1984-85	324	3,587
1985-86	600	3,353
1986-87	739	4,186
1987-88	493	8,562
1988-89	199	9,596
1989-90	263	15,018
1990-91	216	[1]—
1991-92	221	[1]—

[1] Not available.

(a) Direct subsidies—Financial assistance by the Corporation for industry in Docklands, including relocation and modernisation grants;

(b) Tax allowances—Data is not available for capital allowances paid in respect of individual Enterprise Zones, such as the Isle of Dogs;

(c) Rate relief—Reimbursement for local authorities in Enterprise Zones for loss of rates revenue;

(d) Discounted land sales—The London Docklands Development Corporation is expected to achieve market price for land disposals.

London Docklands

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study he has made of the costs and benefits of moving substantial elements of his and other Departments' operations to docklands; and if he will publish details of its findings.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Following the decision announced on 6 February to demolish the headquarters building of my Department at 2 Marsham Street, my predecessor asked officials to draw up proposals for moving a substantial number of this Department's HQ posts away from central Westminster to another London location. In particular, he said that he was considering establishing a substantial departmental presence in docklands. An analysis of the properties available and the overall market position indicates that in terms of cost, quality and suitability docklands currently offers the best option. Further work is in hand.

I have made no analysis of any relocation proposals of other Departments.

Poisons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the proposal by the European Commission that poisonous materials on the green list of wastes for recovery prepared by the OECD should not be regulated by Community law.

Mr. Maclean: Green list wastes do not exhibit any of the hazardous characteristics listed in OECD Council decision C(88)90(final). Under Community law all waste recovery must be carried out at an authorised facility. Movements of green list wastes within OECD are subject to normal commercial controls. The Government consider that any general imposition of additional controls on movements of such wastes outside OECD would be a discriminatory measure in breach of our international obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Housing

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table setting out the average rent level, region by region, for housing association lettings in each of the years from 1979 to 1991, identifying assured tenancy rents separately from the fair rents from 1989 onwards and indicating the annual percentage increase in rents in each year by comparison with the retail price index.

Mr. Baldry: Complete information on housing association rents is not available in the form requested. The following statistics show fair rents registered for housing association tenants in the years 1981 to 1991, and assured tenancy rents for new lettings made in 1990 and 1991. As registered fair rents are fixed for two years the changes between the annual averages below are not comparable with the increases in the RPI.

Woodlands

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about changes affecting the area of ancient semi-natural woodland since 1962.

Mr. Maclean: Details of changes since 1962 are not available. However, the former Nature Conservancy Council's—now English Nature's—ancient woodland inventory shows that in England and Wales, of the area of ancient woodland present in 1930, 38 per cent. has been replaced by plantations usually of non-native species and 7 per cent. has been cleared for other land uses. The Government's broadleaves policy, the changes to the criteria for felling licences, introduced in 1984 and 1985 and the more recent woodland management scheme have resulted in a marked reduction in the rate of change.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it part of his planning policy to prevent any further loss of ancient semi-natural woodland.

Mr. Maclean: The felling of woodland is not a development under the town and country planning system. The protection of ancient woodland will however be a material consideration in preparing development plans and determining planning applications. Felling which is undertaken other than for development purposes is effectively controlled through the felling licence system administered by the Forestry Commission. Sites of special scientific interest which may include ancient woodland are given particular protection and development in or near them is strictly controlled.

Housing Repossessions

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, columns 238-39, what statistical information is available to support his expectation that the number of repossessions will reduce in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: A number of building societies have reported reductions in the numbers of repossessions this year and figures published by the Lord Chancellor's Department show a decline in the number of court actions entered for possession in England and Wales, in the first quarter of 1992.

Urban Programme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds have been allotted to the Yorkshire-Humberside area this year, last year and the previous year for urban programme fund projects.

Mr. Robin Squire: Total urban programme resources allocated to local authorities in the Yorkshire Humberside region this year, last year and the previous year are as follows:

	£ million
1990-91	[1]30·291
1991-92	[1]34·207
1992-93	28·009

[1] included supplementary allocations of £2·18 million in 1990-91 and £4·75 million in 1991-92 for special projects in Sheffield.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the establishment of the urban regeneration agency will be achieved without any reduction in moneys at present allotted to the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: The responsibilities of the URA have yet to be finalised, but I do not expect its establishment to affect future financial provision for the urban programme.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his programme for the establishment of special areas for conservation.

Mr. Maclean: The EC habitats directive sets out the programme for establishing special areas of conservation for all member states. It requires each member state to prepare a national list within three years of the notification of the directive. Within six years of notification, the Commission, in agreement with each member state, shall establish a draft list of sites of Community importance drawn from the national lists. Once a site has been adopted as a site of Community importance, the member state concerned has a maximum of six years thereafter to effect its designation as a special area of conservation. I shall ensure that the United Kingdom complies with this programme.

Caravan Sites Act 1968

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what organisations he intends to consult in his review of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and whether individuals will be offered the opportunity of contributing to the review;

(2) what will be the terms of reference, membership and composition of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 review team;

(3) when the review of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 will be completed.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have in hand a review of the operation of the Caravan Sites Act 1968, with the aim of reducing the nuisance of illegal encampments. We hope to issue shortly a public consultation paper containing our proposals for reform; and comments from individuals will be welcome.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek from the EC Commission a statement of the evidence for the assertion in the draft packaging directive that packaging waste contributes in a great proportion to the increase in the volume of wastes and to the saturation of landfills.

Mr. Maclean: The Commission has not yet produced a proposal for a directive, so it would be premature to comment at this stage on the possible contents.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent to which packaging waste as a proportion of household waste has changed over the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the extent to which packaging contributes to household waste has been collected only in a few recent studies. There is therefore insufficient data on which to assess changes over a period of time.

The national household waste analysis project, currently being undertaken by Warren Spring laboratory and Aspinwalls on behalf of my Department, has been set up to provide better and more detailed information on the composition of household waste. The first results should be available later this year.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Howard: The following surveys, carried out by my Department since 1 November 1991, include questions to individuals about their opinions:

Monitoring the new local authority performance regime.

Housing Attitudes Survey.

English House Conditions Survey: Interview survey of Householders.

Surveys on the housing needs of elderly people:

(a) Survey of residents of special needs housing.

(b) Survey of elderly people on waiting lists for special needs housing.

(c) Housing needs of non-elderly, disabled people in the community.

Ventilation in new homes.

Householders' response to Radon in the home.

Energy Efficiency Campaign—Creative Development Research [Stage 3] (jointly sponsored with the Department of Energy).

Energy Efficiency Campaign Evaluation (jointly sponsored with the Department of Energy).

Waste

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the collection of data on waste within the EC during his presidency of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maclean: Work is already in hand to improve the collection of data on waste within the EC, and we will ensure the work continues under our presidency.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he monitors the reliability of information provided by persons acting as holders of non ferrous waste requiring disposal, when making declarations for waste covered by article 17 of EC directive 84/631/EEC.

Mr. Maclean: Monitoring and enforcement of the procedure in article 17 for consignments of hazardous waste containing non-ferrous metals for recycling is a matter for the waste disposal authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that producers of recycleable waste, or their agents, provide waste regulation authorities with information relating to the quantity of waste requiring disposal by reclamation.

Mr. Maclean: Section 49 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 requires waste collection authorities to prepare a recycling plan. In doing so each council has a duty to investigate what recycling arrangements are appropriate for dealing with household and commercial waste arising in its area and it must include information as to the kinds and quantities of waste that it expects to deal with in that way. The draft plans must be submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend for approval; he has asked for them all to be with him by 1 August. Once a council has determined the content of the plan it is under a duty to sent a copy, and any subsequent modification of it, to the waste regulation authority for the area.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the powers of waste regulation authorities giving them rights (a) to require information about the composition of waste and the processes which produce it and (b) to verify the information.

Mr. Maclean: Powers already exist in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for these purposes insofar as they are necessary for environmental protection.

Section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act requires all holders of waste to ensure that, on the transfer of the waste, a description of it is also transferred. Such a description must be sufficient to enable subsequent holders to manage the waste safely and legally, and will contain information about the processes producing the waste where such information is necessary to that end. Under the Environmental Protection (Duty of Care) Regulations 1991, made under section 34, waste regulation authorities have powers to require waste holders to produce copies of such descriptions.

The onus to ensure that descriptions are correct and adequate rests on the parties to transfers of waste; authorities are not charged with the verification of waste descriptions. Waste disposal authorities are responsible for the supervision of activities at licensed waste disposal sites under section 9 of the Control of Pollution Act. Authorities may set licence conditions requiring the keeping of records and have powers under section 91 of that Act to enter, inspect and take samples of any waste at licensed sites.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will amend current regulations governing the importation and transportation of waste to ensure that regulatory authorities receiving the waste are fully aware of the companies and countries from which the waste is being transferred;

(2) what action he will take to ensure that adequate information about the harmful and hazardous nature of waste material is made available to regulatory authorities;

(3) if he will introduce a legal requirement for regulatory authorities to receive pre-notification of the precise time of departure and arrival of waste imported for recycling and disposal.

Mr. Maclean: Negotiations are in progress on an EC regulation, to replace the current regulations, on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the Community. The current draft of this proposal would require information on the source, composition and the producer of the waste proposed for shipment to be notified to the competent authorities. These authorities would also receive advance notification of the date of shipment of waste for recycling and disposal.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation controlling the imports of toxic and hazardous wastes along the lines of the United States Waste Export and Import Prohibition Act (HR G2580).

Mr. Maclean: No. This Bill, which is not a United States Government measure, would prevent all transfrontier movements of waste, except pre-sorted textile rags, glass and paper wastes for recovery. The United Kingdom is looking to the draft EC waste shipments regulation to improve existing controls on movements of waste. This will include appropriate controls on wastes destined for recovery, implementing a recent decision by the OECD on this subject, which will also be implemented by the United States of America.

World Climate

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to press for international targets, timetables and penalties to ensure that the world climate is protected from made-made environmental pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The climate change convention adopted on 9 May sets as its objective the stabilisation of greenhouse gases concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that would prevent dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate. As a first step towards this objective, the convention also sets targets and timetables for greenhouse gas emiesions which all developed countries will aim to achieve.

Council House Sales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to enable the receipts from the sales of council houses to be applied into the new building programmes for housing to rent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities must set aside part of their capital receipts as provision for repaying debt. This remains a sensible and prudent requirement. It also enables a greater amount of new credit approvals to be issued to those local authorities where housing needs are greatest or where the resources will be put to best use.

The provision of new social housing is now mainly the responsibility of housing associations.

Fire Safety

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will amend the building regulations to impose a requirement in respect of sealed double glazing units that one pane is capable of opening sufficiently to permit persons to escape in circumstances where no other secondary means of escape from fire exist.

Mr. Baldry: There are no plans to amend the building regulations along the lines suggested.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, in order of magnitude, the central funding grant per adult towards the cost of local services paid out to each of the London boroughs in 1991-92; and what is proposed for 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: The table shows the total external support, expressed in pounds per adult, received by each London borough in 1991-92 and 1992-93. The boroughs are listed in ascending order by the amount of support recieved in 1991-92. Total external support consists of revenue support grant, redistributed non-domestic rates and, for some authorities, area protection grant and ILEA grant, following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will show for each local authority for the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 (a) their standard spending assessment relating to capital charges, (b) their actual expenditure relating to this item and (c) the difference between (a) and (b), showing totals for each column for England as a whole;

(2) if he will show for each local authority for the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 (a) their standard spending assessment relating to the other services block, (b) their actual expenditure relating to this item and (c) the difference between (a) and (b), showing totals for each column for England as a whole.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 13 May 1992]: The table shows the England totals for the information requested. The figures for individual local authorities have been placed in the Library.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in chronological order those areas that have already received a recommendation from the Local Government Boundary Commission that they should be reorganised to a unitary authority together with the date of each recommendation.

Mr. Robin Squire: Only in its review of the Isle of Wight did the Local Government Boundary Commission state that it would have proposed a unitary authority, had it been in its power to do so. Their final report was received by the Secretary of State on 10 October 1986.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, at the lowest level of sub-heading used, the expenditure categories employed in itemising public expenditure attributable to the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Howard: Details of my Department's expenditure plans are set out in the Department's 1992 annual report, Cm 1908, and the 1992-93 supply estimates for class VIII environment, Cm 273. Copies of both documents are available in the Library of the House.

Earth Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the specific objectives of Her Majesty's Government at the Earth summit in relation to each item in the proposed "Agenda 21" action plan.

Mr. Maclean: The 40 or so chapters of the Agenda 21 action plan all contain numerous proposals for action by Governments, international bodies, non-governmental organisations, business, local authorities and individual citizens. It is not feasible to set out the United Kingdom's objectives on every specific item. The Government are working with the other participants in the Earth summit to ensure that agenda 21 is given a high level of political commitment in Rio. It will then need to be adapted to the circumstances of individual countries and regions and to evolve over time.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will press for the inclusion of (a) the polluter pays principle, (b) and extension of environmental impact assessment and (c) encouragement properly to evaluate environmental costs in the market place, to be included in the Earth summit declaration on the environment and development, the earth charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The latest draft of the Rio declaration, which has sometimes been referred to as the earth charter, is the product of long and detailed negotiations. It contains satisfactory language, much of it proposed by the United Kingdom, on environmental impact assessment and on internalising environmental costs, taking into account the polluter pays principle. The United Kingdom will strive to ensure that these references are retained in the final text.

Opencast Coal

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 74, on minerals planning guidance note 3, whether the terms of reference of the recent review have included the principles of planning guidance as well as their practical operation;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 74, if he will list the organisations consulted during the consultation exercise on minerals planning guidance note 3; how many responses have been received; if he will provide a breakdown of the responses; and if he will publish a copy of any questionnaire distributed as part of the exercise;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 74, when his consultation exercise on minerals planning guidance note 3 was begun; when it is scheduled to finish; whether it was part of the normal review process or was initiated as a special review; when an announcement of the results will be made; and whether he plans any further reviews in 1992;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 74, on minerals planning guidance note 3, how local authorities were consulted; and if he will publish copies of the letters or questionnaires sent to local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: It is normal practice to monitor the effectiveness of mineral planning guidance notes. As part of the monitoring of MPG3 the Department wrote to representatives of the local authorities, the industry and environmental organisations on 19 December 1991 seeking their views on how well the guidelines were operating and whether they had created any problems. I am placing copies of the letter, which sought views on all the principal aspects of the guidance in MPG3, together with a list of the organisations consulted, in the Library of the House. Comments were requested by 20 March 1992, but responses have continued to come in since that date and will all be considered. Separate consultations were carried out by the Welsh Office.

To date, 55 responses have been received from outside bodies: 30 from local authority associations and individual local authorities; 10 from representatives of the industry; nine from environmental groups; and six from local residents' action groups. The responses are currently being evaluated and in the light of the results of that evaluation, I shall consider whether there is a need for revision of MPG3. I shall announce my decision as soon as possible.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration is being given to reversing the rule at public inquiries that local communities cannot in their objections to opencast mining challenge the commercial need for opencast coal.

Mr. Baldry: There is no such rule. Inspectors must take into account all representations which are material to the planning decision including any arguments advanced by the applicant in support of the proposals and any counter arguments advanced by objectors. However, the potential profitability or otherwise of any proposed development is not usually material to land use planning decisions.

EC Legislation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he intends to bring forward during the United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers in respect of varying standards of implementation of EC environmental legislation by member states; what proposals he intends to bring forward on subsidiarity as it relates to environmental legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: During the presidency we intend to bring the question of proper implementation and enforcement of EC environmental legislation to the attention of the Environment Council, with a view to initiating regular reviews of those issues by Environment Ministers.

We shall continue to press the European Commission to bring forward proposals to set up a Community inspectorate to audit the performance of enforcement agencies within the member states. We will be hosting the first meeting of a new "network" of member state enforcement agencies with a view to setting this up on a permanent basis.

The principle of subsidiarity is already written into the environment chapter of the EC treaty. The treaty on European union agreed at Maastricht will, when it comes into effect, extend the principle to other areas of Community policy.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites of special scientific interest in the United Kingdom which contain significant areas of woodland, indicating for each whether the woodland consists mainly of native wildwoods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Climate Change

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals on (a) global warming and climate change and (b) the United Nations conference on environment and development will be put forward by the United Kingdom at the meeting of the European Agriculture Council on 24 and 25 May.

Mr. Maclean: Proposals for discussion at meetings of the Council of Ministers are primarily a matter for the presidency. My right hon. and learned Friend and I played a full part in discussion of the topics in question at the Environment Council on 26 May.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals on climate change were (a) discussed and (b) decided at the EC Environmental Council on 26 May.

Mr. Maclean: The Council endorsed conclusions on climate change tabled by the presidency which recognised the climate change convention as a significant first step in tackling this global problem and urged all countries to sign the convention during UNCED and thereafter to ratify it as soon as possible. The Council also received a report from the European Commission on proposals it intended to make on specific measures to limit CO_2 emissions.

City Challenge

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons Tameside MBC was not allowed to make a city challenge presentation.

Mr. Robin Squire: Tameside is not one of the 57 urban priority authorities and was not therefore invited to submit a bid. We have considered the possibility of including Tameside's bid in the city challenge competition, but came to the view that our policy should remain unchanged. Tameside MBC was formally notified of this decision on 18 May.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—A Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Howard: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92. The results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Howard: It is the policy of my Department to ensure that payments, including those to small business suppliers, are made promptly within the period stipulated in the appropriate contract or where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their sub-contractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier of contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Conservation Areas (Shops)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for enabling local planning authorities to issue statutory guidelines for shop fronts and advertisements in conservation areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have no plans to introduce statutory guide lines. Paragraphs 53 to 71 of my Department's circular 8/87 give general policy guidance to planning authorities about control of development, including outdoor advertisements, in conservation areas. The Government intend to issue later this year a consultative draft of a new planning policy guidance note about listed buildings and conservation areas.

Recycling

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress by local authorities in encouraging private citizens to separate all recyclable materials from household waste prior to collection.

Mr. MacLean: It is the Government's aim that 25 per cent. of household waste should be recycled by the end of this century. The Environmental Protection Act 1990 requires all waste collection authorities to prepare waste recycling plans. I am expecting the draft plans to be submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend by 1 August. These plans will provide the first comprehensive national survey of recycling activity. To assist local authorities in planning for recycling we have made available a programme of supplementary credit approvals worth £60 million over four years to stimulate investment in recycling projects and from 1 April this year it is now mandatory that waste disposal authorities should pay recycling credits to collection authorities that recycle waste.

Pesticides

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluations have been made of the risks in use of the pesticides (a) pentachlorophenol, (b) pentachlorophenyl laurate and (c) sodium pentachlorophenoxide by (i) his Department, (ii) consultants to his Department or (iii) agencies which report to his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The Department of the Environment has commissioned two reviews of pentachlorophenol, its salts and esters:

"Timber Preservation Chemicals: Volumes 1a and 1b"—Consultants in Environmental Sciences Ltd. Published October 1988, placed in the Library, November 1988.

"Environmental Hazard Assessment: Pentachorophenol"—S. J. Hobbs, (Building Research Establishment) P. D. Howe, S. Dobson (Institute of Terrestrial Ecology). To be published in Autumn 1992

The Department also contributes to the work of the International Programme on Chemical Safety, which in 1987 produced an Environmental health criteria document on pentachlorophenol:

"Pentachlorophenol: Environmental Health Criteria 71"—World Health Organisation 1987. ISBN 92 4 154271 3.

Green Citizens Charter

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response his Department has had to the brochure, "Green Rights and Responsibilities: a Citizen's Guide to the Environment", published by his Department earlier this year; and how many copies of the green citizens charter have been published, and at what cost to date.

Mr. Maclean: This booklet has received a positive response from members of the public, local authorities, companies and voluntary groups. One million copies have been published at a total cost of £119,000. My Department has held initial discussions of the document with the local authority associations and I look forward to developing those discussions further.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of his guidelines for the Local Government Boundary Commission on London and metropolitan counties, contained in his Department's circulars 33/78 and 20/86.

Mr. Robin Squire: Copies of the circulars have been placed in the Library today.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the draft proposals published by the Local Government Boundary Commission regarding the boundaries of London boroughs for which final reports have yet to be issued, showing the dates of publication of first and further draft proposals and the dates by which comments were to be received.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is set out in the table. It includes those reviews where the final report has been submitted recently.

[1] The Commission will submit a separate report on the electoral consequences of their final report in due course

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the findings of the Local Government Boundary Commission in its report No. 627, "The Boundaries of Greater London and the London Boroughs"; and if he will set up a wide-ranging review of the pattern of London boroughs.

Mr. Robin Squire: The report is a useful document based on the thorough work the Local Government Boundary Commission has done in its London boundary reviews. We have no plans for radical change to the pattern of local government in London.

Community Charge

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were registered for the community charge in each parliamentary constituency in Greater London for each year that the community charge register has been in operation.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available.

Water Meters

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to accelerate the findings of the water meter trial areas.

Mr. Maclean: Two reports have so far been published and a final report will be produced in about 12 months' time, when all the trials have been completed. As I am keen that the substantial body of data collected about water metering should be fully analysed and made available promptly not only to the water industry but also to the regulatory bodies, I have proposed to the water industry that the Director General of Water Services should take the lead from the Government side in analysing the results of the trials and the implications for charging methods. In consultation with DOE and NRA, he will also co-ordinate, and where necessary commission, any further studies that are needed.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to speed up the introduction of water meters.

Mr. Maclean: The Director General of Water Services has warned water companies that they must make metering a more attractive option for individual customers. He has also asked them to draw up strategies for the general introduction of water metering where the overall benefit to customers outweighs the costs of installation.

We shall be issuing a consultation paper before the summer recess which will consider a range of possible water conservation measures, including the potential role of metering.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has reached any conclusions on the ability of water metering to avoid the issuing of drought orders.

Mr. Maclean: Information from the national water metering trial areas indicates a substantial reduction in the volume of water supplied particularly during periods of peak demand. However, any programme for the introduction of meters to existing properties will require careful planning and will take some years to complete. In the meantime, drought orders may be required in areas where there is a shortage of rainfall.

Council Elections

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to allow for local council elections in the metropolitan districts in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government have no plans to change the arrangements for elections to metropolitan district councils.

Paper Products

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the environmental impact of (a) paper and (b) tissue products manufactured using (i) recycled feedstock and (ii) new fibre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The European Council of Ministers adopted a regulation in March establishing a Community eco-labelling scheme which is due to come into operation towards the end of the year. The aim of the scheme is to identify products which do the least harm to the environment.

In preparing for the introduction of the scheme Denmark is leading a study to develop criteria for the award of eco-labels to paper products including fine papers and tissues. This study, to which the United Kingdom is contributing, is examining all the environmental impacts of paper manufacture.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to dry-store all nuclear waste on site and ban the disposal of nuclear waste underground or at sea.

Mr. Maclean: Government policy for radioactive waste management is set out in chapter 15 of the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance". High-level or heat generating radioactive waste will be stored at Sellafield and Dounreay for at least 50 years to allow the heat and radioactivity to reduce. It is planned to dispose of intermediate and low-level radioactive waste in the deep disposal facility which UK Nirex is responsible for developing. The Government are reviewing whether the sea disposal option for the disposal of radioactive waste needs to be maintained.

Deep Reservoirs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the mining of deep freshwater resources; what is the estimated age of these deep reservoirs; and what is their estimated current depletion rate.

Mr. Maclean: These are matters for the National Rivers Authority which under section 19 of the Water Resources Act 1991, has responsibility for the conservation, redistribution and augmentation of water resources in England and Wales.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant was paid in Liverpool last year; how much is budgeted for the present year; and if he will consider ways of accelerating the treatment and landscaping of derelict urban land.

Mr. Baldry: Derelict land grant paid in Liverpool last year was £2,315,190. The provisional grant allocation for the present year is £1,508,000.

In order to improve the delivery of policies for land development, including the reclamation of derelict urban land, the Government propose to establish an urban regeneration agency. One of the agency's main objectives will be to treat derelict land in urban areas.

Toxic Waste Incinerator, East Howden

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on the inspector's report arising from the public inquiry into the application to build a toxic waste incinerator at East Howden, north Tyneside.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend will issue his decision on the Howden and linked incinerator inquiries on Teeside as soon as it is practicable to do so.

Council Tax

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the regulations for the procedure for an appeal against the valuation of a property for the purpose of the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: I expect regulations to be available before the summer recess.

Liverpool Garden Festival

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present use of the Liverpool garden festival site.

Mr. Baldry: The Liverpool garden festival site covers 105 acres of which 85 acres has recently been taken over by Tomorrow's Leisure, a subsidiary of Norstead Leisure Ltd, to develop a multi-leisure complex known as Pleasure Island. Officially launched on 7 May 1992, with regional selective assistance of £1 million towards the estimated project cost of £10 million and car parking provided by Merseyside development corporation, Pleasure Island is expected to create 250 new jobs.

The remaining 20 acres was designated for public open space and housing, of which 393 dwellings are now complete.

Power Plant Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information has been provided by his Department to the European Commission on the levels and types of atmospheric particulate pollution discharged from Britain's most polluting power plants; and if he will publish the documentation.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his officials will reply to the letters from Castle Morpeth borough council dated 8 November 1991, 28 January 1992, and 16 March 1992 requesting guidance on compulsory competitive tendering for leisure management.

Mr. Redwood: My officials replied on 21 May 1992. I will send a copy of the letter to the hon. Member.

Poll Tax Surcharges

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average level of poll tax surcharge levied in the current financial year in (a) England and Wales and (b) the city of Liverpool; what rights he will give to citizens to refuse payment of surcharges; what representations he has received about the Liverpool surcharge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The average amount shown under "other adjustments" on 1992-93 community charge bills for English authorities is £22. Of this, £14 is accounted for by the budgeted provision for non-collection of 1992-93 community charges. The corresponding figures for Liverpool city council are £106 and £30 respectively, and I have received a number of letters from citizens of Liverpool about this. Whilst I have considerable sympathy with those chargepayers who have to pay extra for non-collection, I believe it is right that these amounts should continue to be met locally as part of the total charge, in the same way as the equivalent unpaid sums were treated under the old rating system.

Groundwater

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the level of groundwater under London over the past 10 years, and of its quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: This is primarily a matter for the National Rivers Authority which monitors groundwater levels. I understand that indications from recent surveys are that levels below London are rising by some 1 to 2 metres per year because of a drop in industrial activity and consequent abstraction. The NRA and Thames Water are currently conducting studies into the rising levels and the quality of London's groundwater.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to monitor the purity of groundwater from private boreholes.

Mr. Maclean: This is primarily a matter for the National Rivers Authority. However, water companies and other abstractors of water from private boreholes do carry out their own monitoring of groundwater quality. Holders of authorisations to discharge effluents underground also monitor groundwater by the use of boreholes.

The Private Water Supplies Regulations 1991 set out the duties of local authorities for sampling and analysing those supplies used for drinking, washing, cooking or commercial food production. The drinking water inspectorate is responsible for checking that authorities in England and Wales comply with the requirements of these regulations.

Valuation Tribunals

Mr. Channon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the review committee of the management of tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I expect to consider the report of the financial management and policy review of the valuation tribunals shortly.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district council the amount of money spent on adaptations to the homes of disabled people in each of the last five years; and what contribution was made towards those costs from central Government funds.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 18 May 1992]: A table has been deposited in the Library with the available information about amounts of money spent by local authorities on adaptations to homes of disabled persons. It covers the calendar years 1987 to 1991.

This table shows total grants paid by local authorities to private owners and tenants, including council tenants, for adaptations to homes of disabled persons. These payments are of conversion and improvement grants, and intermediate grants for disabled persons' dwellings under part XV of the Housing Act 1985, together with disabled facilities grants under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, as introduced from July 1990.

The table also shows the value of the work completed on authorities' own housing stock on adaptations for disabled persons.

For grants approved under the Housing Act 1985, the Department provides a contribution of 90 per cent. of the loan charges payable on grant expenditure.

For disabled facilities grants the Department provides a 75 per cent. contribution towards local authorities' expenditure on grants for owner occupiers and private tenants. Local authorities' expenditure on these grants for council tenants is eligible for 100 per cent. subsidy from the housing revenue account within the authority's subsidy limits, as is their expenditure on adaptations for disabled council tenants.

Canary Wharf

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum expended by the London Docklands development corporation in connection with the development of Canary Wharf.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 21 May 1992]: The London Docklands development corporation spent £4 million on acquisition and site clearance, £28 million on the eastern access road and Heron's Quay roundabout and £15 million on the expansion of the electricity supply, and received from Olympia and York £20 million for a long lease on the site. In addition, Olympia and York contributed £70 million to the docklands light railway which benefits the whole northern docklands area.

DNV Technica

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role is being undertaken for his Department by DNV Technica; whether this company was appointed as a result of competitive tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 21 May 1992]: DNV Technica completed last year an evaluation of currently available technologies for abating nitrogen oxide emissions from large combustion plants. The initial contract was let by competitive tendering in December 1989 and completed in March 1991. A further contract with Technica, let in August 1991 by single tender action and completed in March 1992, provided United Kingdom input to the UNECE NO task force.

Housing, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been obtained in Liverpool in capital receipts from the sale of council homes since the introduction of the right-to-buy.

Mr. Baldry: The total discounted values of all sales of houses and flats for each year from 1980-81, as reported by Liverpool city council, are listed in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which the sales were financed by loans from the authority.

Liverpool Discounted value of all sales (£000)

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent communications his Department has had with the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee on the options for returning to countries of origin radioactive wastes arising from spent fuel reprocessed at Sellafield and Dounreay.

Mr. Maclean: The Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee has been asked for its views on the technical basis of British Nuclear Fuels' proposals on implementing the return of waste options in its reprocessing contracts with overseas customers, and in particular on the likely radiological and environmental impact for the United Kingdom. The Atomic Energy Authority is still considering its options for the management of waste from reprocessing at Dounreay.

Eyhorne Manor

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that British Rail is discharging its listed buildings responsibility for Eyhorne Manor, Hollingbourne in the corridor of the safeguarded section of the currently proposed route for the Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

Enforcement of listed building controls, including service of repairs notices, would in the first instance be a matter for the local planning authority; but I understand that Maidstone borough council is not aware of any current problems at the manor. British Rail is taking steps to tidy the garden.

Caravans Act 1966

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, in considering designation within the terms of the Caravans Act 1966, he will make it his policy to approve an additional transit site for the county of Hereford and Worcester.

Sir George Young: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consider applications for designation on a county or district-wide basis and must be satisfied that the criteria for designation have been met. It is for the county council to decide whether or not an additional transit site is needed in the county of Hereford and Worcester. In doing so, the county council will bear in mind the numbers of gipsies frequenting the area and they must satisfy my right hon. and learned Friend that adequate site provision has been made to meet the accommodation needs, within reason, of the gipsies who reside in or resort to the area.

PRIME MINISTER

Leith

Q9. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Prime Minister if he intends to pay an official visit to Leith in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I visited Scotland yesterday. I have no immediate plans to visit Leith, but I shall be visiting Scotland again in the near future.

Telephone Rental Charges

Q10. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received regarding the regulation of telephone rental charges; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received various representations on this subject. The regulation of British Telecom's rental charges is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications in the first instance. I understand that he hopes to complete his current review of BT's prices shortly.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 2 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the total expenditure by the Prime Minister's Office on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister: Expenditure by my office on press and public relations was not recorded separately before 1987-88. The total expenditure for each year since then is as follows:

Year	£
1987-88	377,987
1988-89	419,326
1989-90	427,802
1990-91	553,068
1991-92	[1]606,933
1992-93	[2]629,649

[1] estimate
[2] budget

Note: The figures from 1990-91 onwards include notional superannuation costs which are excluded from the figures for earlier years.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the total expenditure by the Cabinet Office on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister: Expenditure by the Cabinet Office on press and public relations for the years from 1984-85 is as follows:

Year	£
1984-85	247,495
1985-86	232,980
1986-87	224,813
1987-88	215,925
1988-89	201,837
1989-90	205,650
1990-91	165,088
1991-92	[1]217,358
1992-93	[2]229,471

[2] budget

In addition, there was expenditure on publicity and public information associated with the citizens charter of £1,014,045—estimate—in 1991-92. Similar expenditure in 1992-93 is provisionally estimated at £1,280,000.

Similar information is not available for earlier years.

Consultants Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total sum paid out in fees by the Cabinet Office to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister: The expenditure by the Cabinet Office, including, from its creation on 1 October 1987, the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service on management and computer consultancies, including certain consultancies relating to the civil service as a whole, in the financial years from 1983-84 was as follows:

Year	£
1983-84	152,000
1984-85	423,818
1985-86	329,334
1986-87	505,092
1987-88	417,778

The figures for each year since then, which exclude the cost of computer consultancies, are as follows:

Year	£
1988-89	70,608
1989-90	51,500
1990-91	182,000
1991-92	[1]194,390
1992-93	[2]343,060

[2] Budget.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total sum paid out in fees by the Prime Minister's Office to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister: There has been no expenditure by my office on fees to management consultants since 1979-80, and none is planned for 1992-93.

EC (Enlargement)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government policy in respect of Chancellor Kohl's proposed veto on the enlargement of the EC; and what means exist of overcoming this veto under the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any such statement by the German Government. The Maastricht European Council agreed that accession negotiations could start as soon as the negotiations on future financing are concluded. Under the terms of the treaty on European union decisions to admit new members are taken by unanimity.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by (a) the Prime Minister's Office and (b) the Cabinet Office since 1 November 1991.

The Prime Minister: No such surveys were carried out for my office or the Cabinet Office during the period in question.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister what attempts have been made by Her Majesty's Government (a) to publicise the issues to be discussed and decisions to be taken at the Earth summit in Rio in June and (b) to publicise Her Majesty's Government's policies and proposals for the Earth summit; and what has been the cost to Her Majesty's Government of publicity promoted by all Departments of Government and the United Nations conference on environment and development.

The Prime Minister: We have taken an active and positive role in disseminating information on the forthcoming Earth summit. The United Kingdom's approach has been set out to Parliament, in speeches, articles and correspondence, and media briefings. We have produced booklets and videos, commissioned reports and kept in close touch with local authorities and the non-governmental community. The directly attributable publicity costs have fallen within the budgets of the Departments concerned.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received since 9 April on the Earth summit to be held in Rio de Janeiro in June; and what responses he has made.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received many thousands of representations from interested organisations and individual citizens. Replies have confirmed that I will be going to Rio de Janeiro: that the Government are committed to working for a successful and productive outcome to the Earth summit; that we are aiming for international conventions on climate change and biological diversity; and that we will be working for a statement on the sustainable management of the world's forests, a Rio declaration of international environmental principles, and a coherent, realistic and measurable plan of action for the 21st century, agenda 21.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with counterpart heads of government on the prospects for the Earth summit in Brazil since 9 April.

The Prime Minister: I have discussed the Earth summit with many of the Heads of Government I have met since 9 April.

Third World Environment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister what responses Her Majesty's Government intends to make to the World bank's call for greater multilateral investment to be made in the world's poorer countries to improve the environment.

The Prime Minister: The Government broadly agree with the analysis in the 1992 world development report published by the World bank last month. This suggests that the bulk of the investments required to meet the costs of a better environment will be paid for by the customers of the private and public enterprises responsible for the damage and by the beneficiaries of improved environmental conditions.

The World bank notes that Governments will have to spend more too, primarily from increased domestic savings; but that international finance, private and official, will also have a crucial role. Britain intends to participate fully in the replenishments of the multilateral funds which will help to provide developing countries with the necessary resources.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what percentage of the total work force in his office are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his office; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No current members of my work force are registered as disabled. For recruitment purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office which is an equal opportunities employer, and continually seeks to encourage the employment of people with disabilities.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give separate figures for the spending by the Prime Minister's Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister: My office has incurred no expenditure on advertising or promotional material and there are no plans for any such expenditure in 1992-93.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will assess the results of sanctions against Libya.

The Prime Minister: Members of the United Nations were required to report by 15 May on the measures they have taken to implement the sanctions imposed by United Nations Security Council resolution 748. The United Nations secretariat is now assessing their responses. Sanctions are being widely implemented. I hope they will achieve their objective: to make Libya comply in full with Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

PRIME MINISTER

Radar Station, Fylingdales

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to refuse any request made by the US administration to modify the radar station at Fylingdales; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1992]: RAF Fylingdales is a ballistic missile early warning site whose operation is the subject of a bilateral agreement drawn up in 1960 between the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States. There has been no request for any change to this agreement.

India (Treaty)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if the extradition treaty agreed between Britain and India has been ratified by both Governments; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1992]: We and the Indian Government have not yet signed the treaty, but we intend to do this as soon as possible. Ratification will follow in due course.

Ministerial Sub-committee on London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the ministerial sub-committee on London as a policy forum for discussions on the future of London; when the sub-committee has met; and what was its agenda;

(2) what plans he has to publish the proceedings and decisions of the ministerial sub-committee on London.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The terms of reference of the ministerial sub-committee on London, together with those of all other ministerial committees and sub-committees of the Cabinet, were given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 19 May at columns 110-18.

The Government will continue to make their decisions known to Parliament and the public. I do not, however, propose to give details on the topics discussed by individual committees, the timing of meetings or their proceedings.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Schedule E Tax

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will issue a practice note to confirm that re-employment counselling and training is not taxable under any part of the schedule E tax legislation.

Mr. Dorrell: The tax position of re-employment counselling and similar training arranged by employers for their employees depends on the precise circumstances in which it is given. It is not the case that it is invariably exempt from tax. A charge might arise under the legislation dealing with the taxation of redundancy arrangements, subject to the £30,000 exemption which the legislation provides for a redundancy package as a whole.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Governor of the Bank of England regarding the role of banks and other financial institutions involved in lending currency and share dealing transactions with the late Mr. Robert Maxwell and companies connected with him; and if he will raise issues of public concern arising from those transactions with the Governor when he next meets him.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets the Governor of the Bank of England from time to time to discuss a range of issues.

Alcohol Tax

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on setting a minimum rate of excise duty on spirits.

Sir John Cope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 203,.

Stamp Duty

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the continuation of the temporary suspension of stamp duty after August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: We have received a number of representations for the temporary increase in the stamp duty threshold to be extended beyond 19 August. When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced the increase last December, he made it clear that it was a temporary measure for eight months to help stimulate the housing market. We do not propose to extend the increased threshold beyond 19 August.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the total work force in his Departments are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The percentage of the total work force in the Chancellor's departments who are registered as disabled is shown in the table. In many instances, departments also employ people with disabilities who have chosen not to register. Departments seek to implement the relevant parts of the civil service code of practice on the employment of disabled people.

Wholesale Financial Markets

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the benefits arising from the transfer of the regulation of wholesale financial markets from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Treasury.

Mr. Nelson: The wholesale financial markets are regulated by the Bank of England under section 43 of the Financial Services Act 1986. I have no reason to believe that the transfer of responsibilities for financial services from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Treasury will have any impact in this area.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers."

Mr. Portillo: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has undertaken a survey of prompt payment records of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Portillo: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their sub-contractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with the Inland Revenue Staff Federation on the future of performance-related pay and plans for structural change within the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor met the general secretary last September and discussed performance-related pay. Discussions are now taking place between Inland Revenue management and the Inland Revenue Staff Federation about the future of performance-related pay and plans for structural change within the Inland Revenue.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Sir John Cope: Expenditure on press and public relations is as follows:

The expenditure for Her Majesty's Treasury, excluding the BT share offer, was £548,264 in 1988-89, £564,691 in 1989-90, £510,489 in 1990-91 and £578,358 in 1991-92. The estimate for 1992-93 is £624,432. Press and public relation expenditure for the BT share offer was £1,644,000 in 1991-92 and is estimated at £40,000 in 1992-93. The figures for the BT share offer include the cost of marketing advice. Comparable figures for earlier years are unavailable because of machinery of Government changes and could be given only at disproportionate cost.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give separate figures for the estimated spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material during 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: The estimated spending on advertising and other promotional material by Her Majesty's Treasury during 1992-93 is £72,500, none of which will be for television or radio advertising.

RPI Advisory Committee

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the members of the Retail Price Index Advisory Commitee, the dates on which they were appointed and the length of their terms of office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The members of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee are:

Chairman
Mr. W. P. McLennan (Director, Central Statistical Office)
Members
Mr. J. Astin (EUROSTAT, Luxembourg)
Mr. S. Brittan (The Financial Times)
Professor D. Currie (London Business School)
Professor M. C. Fleming (Loughbourgh University)
Mr. K. H. B. Frere (Nominated by the National Federation of Consumer Groups)
Mr. S. G. B. Henry (Bank of England)
Mr. T. Hoyes (Nominated by Age Concern)
Mr. J. Hughes (Nominated by the National Consumer Council)
Mr. D. Lea OBE (Nominated by the Trades Union Congress)
Miss R. Lea (The Mitsubishi Bank Ltd.)
Miss R. J. Maurice
Mr. C. J. Mowl (HM Treasury)
Dr. J. Muellbauer (Nuffield College, Oxford)
Professor J. F. Pickering (Portsmouth Polytechnic)
Professor D. G. Rhys (Cardiff Business School)
Mrs. B. Rosewell (Business Strategies Ltd)
Dr. P. Rowlatt (National Economic Research Associates)
Dr. A. Sentance (Nominated by the Confederation of British Industry)
Professor R. Turvey (London School of Economics)
Mr. R. G. Ward (Central Statistical Office)
Secretary
Mr. D. J. Sellwood (Central Statistical Office)
Assistant Secretary
Mrs. M. S. Dolling (Central Statistical Office)

They were appointed in March 1992. There is no fixed term of office for committee members; the committee is appointed with specific terms of reference and members normally serve until examination of the matters referred has been completed. The current terms of reference were announced on 19 May 1992, at column 75 by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer).

Car Taxation

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will alter the current tax treatment of cars so as to favour fuel efficient cars.

Mr. Dorrell: I have noted the hon. Member's suggestion.

Single Currency

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list any two or more countries which operate a single market but do not have a single currency.

Mr. Nelson: Australia and New Zealand have removed most barriers to the free movement of goods, services, labour and capital between them, but do not share a single currency. Other groups of countries—such as the United Kingdom and Ireland and the Benelux countries—have had very liberal trade arrangements for some time without a single currency.

Spirits and Wines

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give an update on negotiations at the last Ecofin regarding the question of harmonisation rating of spirits and wines.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 21 May 1992, Official Report, column 203.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library (a) the representations he has recently received from the CBI and others on advance corporation tax and (B) the text of his replies to these submissions.

Mr. Dorrell: In his last Budget statement, my right hon. Friend said he had received many representations about surplus advance corporation tax and set out the Government's position. A copy of the representations made by the CBI on 29 January 1992 has been placed in the Library.

European Co-operative Statute

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 79, if he will give the starting date and the closing date for the formal consultation exercise in regard to the draft European co-operative statute.

Mr. Nelson: We hope to issue a combined consultative document before the end of this month on all three draft EC 'social economy' statutes, including the European co-operative statute, and their accompanying employee participation directives. Interested parties will be invited to give their comments by 28 August.

Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what matters in regard to the environment were (a) discussed and (b) decided at the meeting G7 held in Washington on 25-26 April.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the statement issued by the G7 on 26 April, copies of which are being deposited in the House Libraries. The statement sets out the topics considered at the meeting: these did not include the environment, and no decisions were taken on environmental matters.

Company Cars

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to eliminate the company car subsidy.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 14 May, at column 163.

Inheritance Tax and CTT

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with respect to schemes for conditional exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax since 1976 involving the granting of public access to the countryside (a) how many such schemes have been agreed and what is the total amount of tax relief involved, (b) how many schemes are under discussion, (c) how many miles of public footpath have been created, (d) how many miles of permissive path have been created and (e) how many acres of land have been opened up for a right to roam.

Mr. Dorrell: The table shows the number of cases of land and buildings for which conditional exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax has been granted in each year from 1983-84. Comparable figures for earlier years, separate figures for land only and figures for cases under consideration are not available at acceptable cost.

	Number
1983-84	16
1984-85	18
1985-86	22
1986-87	18
1987-88	22
1988-89	11
1989-90	9
1990-91	17
1991-92	16

The annual average cost of inheritance tax conditional exemption for land and buildings is estimated to have been between £5 million and £10 million over this period.

I regret that statistics of new public footpaths and permissive paths, or of land over which there is a right to roam, resulting from conditional exemption are not available.

Gulf War

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Exchequer of the Gulf war; and what was the cash contribution of other countries.

Mr. Portillo: The total cost to the exchequer of the Gulf conflict will not be known with certainty for some time. The additional military costs incurred are currently estimated by the Ministry of Defence to be of the order of £2·5 billion. Further direct costs borne by the Exchequer include claims against the Export Credits Guarantee Department, for which the corrected estimate is some £750 million, to be met over several years but which may be recoverable in part; and costs of some £13 million for the health departments and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Cash contributions provided by other Governments to help meet the United Kingdom costs amount to some £2,049 million.

Wakefield Valuation Office

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the reasons for the closure of the district valuation office in Wakefield and outline the steps taken to inform the public of this proposal prior to closure.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The Wakefield valuation office closed on 30 September 1991, upon merger with the Doncaster valuation office.

The merger was effected as part of the valuation office restructuring programme announced in 1989, to address the loss of domestic rating and the loss of 1,000 posts associated with that function.

The operational needs of the branch with the personnel considerations of the staff involved were met by a merged office, located in Doncaster. Local professional practices were advised of the transfer of work as were members of the public who were in correspondence with the office during the preceding four weeks. Arrangements have been made for mail to be redirected for 12 months and telephone directories amended.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider linking the availability of Government credits to the Commonwealth of Independent States to the amount of bad debt outstanding to British companies who have exported to the Commonwealth of Independent States; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The Prime Minister announced at the time of President Yeltsin's visit to London in February that up to £280 million of medium-term export credit cover would be made available to the states of the former Soviet Union subject to certain conditions. One of these conditions was that the country concerned should have signed the memorandum of understanding of 28 October 1991, acknowledging joint and several liability for the debts of the former Soviet Union, including, of course, debts outstanding to British exporters. This condition will ensure that no new credit is given to any member of the CIS which does not accept liability for its obligations to British exporters. The Government lose no opportunity to remind its various interlocutors in the CIS of the importance of honouring these obligations.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of (a) civil service pensioners and (b) other public service pensioners who left the pension list during the years 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Details of the pensioners of the main centrally managed public service pension schemes who ceased to draw their pensions in the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88 are as follows. Figures are not kept centrally for the locally administered local government, police, and fire service schemes, nor for those schemes operated by non-departmental public bodies.

	1986-87	1987-88
Civil service	9,798	9,033
Armed forces	[1]12,265	10,790
Teachers (England and Wales)	6,021	6,313

	1986-87	1987-88
Teachers (Scotland)	919	878
NHS (England and Wales)	8,121	8,932
NHS (Scotland)	835	776

PSBR

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest Government forecast for the public sector borrowing requirement in 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: £28·1 billion, as set out in the 1992 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Photocopy Agreements

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total of capital allowances to (a) finance companies and (b) supplier companies in respect of cost per copy photocopy agreements in the most recent year available; and what is his estimate of the total of revenue allowances for users of copiers subject to such agreements.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or on the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government to their sub-contractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the sub-contractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

My Department will continue to comply with Government best practice on this matter.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exists and are distributed by HM Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what future measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Police Manpower

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications there were in each police force in England and Wales for increased police manpower for 1992-93; what are the numbers involved and the numbers agreed to for the current year; and if he will list alongside the percentage change in crime for each force since 1979.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is set out in the table.

The rate of increase in crime is only one aspect of a complex of information against which decisions on establishment increases are made. These include actual crime levels; other demands on the police; population levels; and existing manpower levels.

Fines (Non-payment)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for future imprisonment of non-payers of fines.

Mr. Jack: Imprisonment is needed as the last resort for fine defaulters who have culpably failed or wilfully refused to pay a fine. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 which comes into effect in October this year will make fine assessment more realistic and fines easier to enforce. A new system of unit fines, relating fines more closely to an offender's ability to pay, should, together with the new power to attach fines to income support, ensure that imprisonment for default is restricted to those who have no excuse not to pay.

National Identity Cards

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce national identity cards for all citizens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am not at present persuaded of the case for a national identity card system either on policing grounds or for immigration control purposes.

Police Assaults

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the North Wales constabulary have been victims of assault whilst on duty for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Jack: The available information has been provided by the North Wales police force and is contained in the table.

Offences Against the Person Act 1861:
Section 18—Wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm.
Section 20—Inflicting bodily injury.
Section 47—Assault occasioning bodily harm.
Police Act 1964:
Section 51—Assaults on constables.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there were for each of the last 12 months for assaulting police officers of the North Wales constabulary whilst on duty.

Mr. Jack: The information available centrally relates to a study undertaken in the last six months of 1991 into convictions for assaults where the victim was a police officer. The study was published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 3/92, a copy of which is in the Library. Table 9 of this bulletin shows that there were 45 such convictions recorded in North Wales/Dyfed-Powys during this six-month period.

[2] Less than 25 offenders sentenced.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the North Wales constabulary were assaulted with a weapon whilst on duty for each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Michael Jack: The North Wales police force's computer records indicate that three officers in the force were assaulted with a weapon between May 19[illegible] and April 1992.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Boundary Commission for England to begin its review of the parliamentary boundaries in London; what work has already been undertaken in this regard; when submissions will be invited from interested individuals and organisations prior to the publication of provisional recommendations; and from what date submissions will be invited.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Boundary Commission for England has not yet decided when it will start work on its review of parliamentary boundaries in London. However, the practice of the commission is not to undertake consultation prior to publication of its provisional recommendations. When such recommendations have been published, representations with respect to the proposed recommendations may be made to the commission within the statutory period of one month after the date of publication.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the names of the Parliamentary Boundary Commissioners for Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Madam Speaker is chairman of the commission. The other members are:

Member	Appointed by	Period of office
The Hon. Mr. Justice Anthony Evans	Lord Chancellor	April 1989 to 31 December 1992
Mr. W. P. Davey CBE, DL, IPFA	Home Secretary	March 1989 to 31 December 1992
Mr. M. P. McLaggan JP, DL, MA	Secretary of State for Wales	[1]March 1989 to 31 December 1992

[1] First appointed in July 1980.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Figures for expenditure on newspaper and television advertising from 1979-80 to 1983-84 were given in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 25 May 1984, at column 587 and those for 1984-85 were given in answer to another question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West on 19 December 1985, at column 275.

Figures for radio advertising and other promotional literature for the years from 1979-80 to 1984-85 were given in answer to questions from the hon. Member on 19 November 1986, at columns 202-4 and the hon. Member was also given in those replies figures for expenditure on newspaper, television and radio advertising and other promotional literature for 1985-86.

Figures for the years 1986-87 to 1990-91, provisional, for total advertising expenditure—all media—and production and distribution of other promotional material were given in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 12 March 1990 at columns 23-24.

Apart from the final year, 1990-91, it would not be possible to provide more detailed information for those years except at disproportionate cost as stated in a previous answer to a question from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 25 April 1991 at columns 535-36.

Expenditure figures for the years 1990-91, 1991-92 and estimates for 1992-93 are as follows:

TV advertising	2,024	3,000	4,000
Radio advertising	109	117	196
Newspaper advertising	3,595	2,225	1,380
Prodution and distribution of other promotional material (including poster advertising)	6,750	6,976	8,630

I trust that the hon. Member will recognise that this expenditure is incurred on public information schemes of the kind that are undertaken by any Government Department and do not in any way involve party political campaigning.

Carl Bridgewater

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the safety of the conviction in the Carl Bridgewater trial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Since 1982 there have been about 200 representations concerning the safety of these convictions from Members of Parliament and members of the public. In 1987, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) referred the cases of Michael Hickey, Vincent Hickey and James Robinson to the Court of Appeal. In 1989, the court concluded that the verdicts were safe and satisfactory.

In June 1991, solicitors acting on behalf of the families of the convicted men submitted a petition to the Secretary of State seeking a further intervention in the case. It was decided that further inquiries should be made and, at the request of the chief constable of Staffordshire, a senior officer from the Merseyside police is currently investigating these representations.

Albany Prison

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the future policy for Her Majesty's prison Albany on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Present plans are for Albany prison to be withdrawn from the dispersal system later this year. Its future role will then be that of a category B non-dispersal training prison.

Police Homes

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department gives to police authorities over the repossession of police homes occupied by the wives and families of policemen from whom the wife is separated or against whom divorce proceedings are under way.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No guidance is currently issued by the Home Office since occupation is a matter for the police authority concerned. However, a joint working party has recently been set up by the two sides of the Police Negotiating Board for the purpose of drawing up guidelines.

Criminal Convictions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases concerning the safety of criminal convictions are currently being received by his Department.

Mr. Jack: Statistics for the quarter ended 31 March 1992 show that 195 cases of alleged wrongful conviction were received.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters to him dated 11 February, 4 March and 16 April from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Tyrrell at Littlehey Priory.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply has been sent to the right hon. Member.

Brixton Gaol (IRA Escape)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish all the inquiries by the police and the Prison Department into the Special Branch operation and the July 1991 escape of the alleged IRA suspect at Brixton gaol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. The recent report by Mr. Bailey, deputy chief constable of Nottinghamshire, was commissioned by the chief constable of Staffordshire. As to earlier reports, I have nothing to add to the various statements made by my predecessor on this matter.

Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalasingham

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive a report from the Essex constabulary on their investigations into the convictions of Sam Kulasingham and Prem Sivalasingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Essex police are actively proceeding with their inquiries into this case but the extent of their remaining inquiries makes it difficult, at this stage to give a precise timing for their conclusions.

UKIAS

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual level of funding by his Department to UKIAS; and if he will make a statement on the future of that organisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office paid £1,666,000 grant in aid to the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service in 1991-92. This included grant for the service's refugee unit which has now been constituted as a separate body. In respect of the future of UKIAS, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 18 May 1992, at column 10.

Buildings at Risk Trust

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Buildings At Risk Trust, based in Derbyshire, has applied to the Charity Commissioners to register as a charity.

Mr. Jack: The Buildings At Risk Trust, a proposed charitable company, has not yet formally applied for registration as a charity to the Charity Commissioners. It has, however, submitted its draft memorandum and articles of association to the commissioners with a view to being registered. The commissioners are currently considering these.

Expatriate Votes

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, when the information becomes available to his Department, he will list by constituency the number of expatriate votes cast in the last general election.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 13 May 1992, at column 116 and to a question from the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 11 May 1992, at column 20.

Ashford Remand Centre

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his current intentions for the site of the former Ashford, Middlesex, remand centre.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Our current intention is to redevelop this site by building a new prison for 600 adult males. The date on which construction would begin has yet to be determined.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate, in connection with the decision to demolish Ashford, Middlesex, remand centre and to build a category B prison, the costs of (a) the cancellation of the building contract, (b) tidying up and seeding the site and (c) agreeing and preparing the lease granted to Spelthorne borough council in October 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) no contract to build a new prison on the site at Ashford had been let when it was decided to defer the construction of the prison in November 1990 and so no costs were incurred on this score;

(b) the total cost of clearing and preparing the Ashford site, including the demolition of the remand centre which formerly occupied the site, was £880,000;

(c) it is not possible to quantify the cost of the time spent by officials on agreeing and preparing the lease granted to Spelthorne borough council in October 1991, because it formed only a small part of their overall duties. Other costs, including solicitors' fees, totalled £779·25.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will indicate, in connection with the plans for the Ashford remand centre site, how much has now been offered to Spelthorne borough council to vary the terms of the lease, how much is being spent on seeking to renegotiate the lease and how much extra it will cost to build a new prison on this site.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Spelthorne borough council was offered £20,000 including VAT, as part of proposals to vary the terms of the lease it currently holds on the site for a new prison at Ashford.

It is not possible to quantify the cost of the time being spent by officials on seeking to renegotiate the lease, because it forms only a small portion of their overall duties.

The current estimated cost of building a new prison on the site is £69 million. The actual cost will depend on when construction actually begins.

Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to release Karamjit Singh Chahal from Bedford prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 22 May 1992]: I am actively considering Mr. Chahal's case, including the question of his detention and will take a further decision shortly.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The full cost of staff, accommodation and administration for the Home Office press office from 1979-80 to 1990-91 was:

1979-80	283,140
1980-81	392,532
1981-82	381,799
1982-83	424,290
1983-84	516,362
1984-85	560,512
1985-86	606,996
1986-87	548,136
1987-88	599,282
1988-89	674,945
1989-90	715,646
1990-91	786,519
1991-92	792,125

The estimate cost for 1992-93 is £835,441·38.

Notes:

1. Figures supplied before 1986-87 were the costs estimated by the Treasury. After devolved budgets the estimates are based on Home Office costs.

2. Press Office figures include the costs for staff accommodation and administration costs.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 May 1992]: For information prior to 1990-91, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the then Home Secretary on 1 May 1991, at column 177. The Home Office spent approximately £1,686,000 for the financial year 1991-92. There is no centrally determined estimate for expenditure on management consultancies in 1992-93.

Firearms

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notifiable offences in which shotguns were used took place in each year (a) from 1985 and (b) in 1992 so far in each police force area.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The information requested is set out in the table. Information for 1991 and 1992 is not yet available.

Notifiable offences recorded by the Police in which shot guns were reported to have been used.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal offences involving shotguns have been domestic incidents in each year from 1985 in each police force area.

Mr. Jack: For offences involving shotguns, information about the relationship between suspect and victim is available only for homicide offences. The number of homicide offences in which the relationship between the suspect and victim was domestic and where a shotgun was used is given in the table, for each police force in England and Wales for each year between 1985 and 1990.

Information for 1991 is not yet available.

Notes:

1. Offences currently recorded as homicide as at 1 September 1991.
2. The term "Domestic" includes the following relationships between victim and suspect: son or daughter; parent; spouse, cohabitant or former spouse or cohabitant; other family; lover or former lover including spouse's lover or lover's spouse or other associate.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of the total Home Office work force some 0·4 per cent. are registered disabled persons: we have no record of the number of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register. Specific targets have been set to increase the numbers of staff with disabilities employed in the Department. A departmental working group keeps the position under review and has taken a number of initiatives to promote policies and improve practices.

Knife Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) men and (b) women, who were under the age of 21 years, have been convicted of offences which involved the use of a knife at courts covering the Greater London area for each of the last three years;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women were charged with the use of a knife in a criminal offence at courts in England and Wales during the last three years;

(3) how many people appearing in court in England and Wales were charged with offences which related to the use of a knife in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Information available centrally, which is given in the tables, relates only to the number of persons prosecuted and found guilty for possession of knives under the Prevention of Crime Act 1953, section 1 and the Criminal Justice Act 1988, section 139 for the years 1988 to 1990. It is not possible to distinguish centrally whether or not knives have been used for other offences, such as wounding. Information for 1991 is not yet available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by the Duchy of Lancaster since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Waldegrave: No public opinion surveys have been carried out by the Duchy of Lancaster from 1991 to the present day.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total sum paid out in fees by the Duchy of Lancaster's Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: Fees paid to management consultants by the Duchy of Lancaster are as follows:

Period	Amount (£)	Consultant
1979-80	34,097	Peat Marwick
1980-81	Nil
1981-82	Nil
1982-83	Nil

Nuclear Structure Facility, Daresbury

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster for what reason the decision to close the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury was taken without any scientific review.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The decision to close the nuclear structure facility was taken by the Science and Engineering Research Council. The council is fully qualified to make such scientific decisions, looking across its programme as a whole.

The council had before it the views of its nuclear physics board which naturally regretted the closure decision but nonetheless reported that keeping the facility in operation beyond 1993 was of lower scientific priority than other claims on the resources available.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster where the current nuclear physics research carried out at the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury will be carried out once the nuclear structure facility closes.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Researchers in this field will have access to a number of facilities in Europe to continue their work, notably those at Mainz and at Legnaro and, in due course, at the Vivitron facility being built at Strasbourg.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many scientists, physicists and support staff will lose their jobs when the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury closes; and what the redundancy cost of the closure will be.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Science and Engineering Research Council has made clear its commitment to keep compulsory redundancy to the minimum consistent with an orderly run down of the facility. Some redundancies may however prove necessary. The actual number, and costs, will depend on the level of early voluntary retirement, the rate of natural wastage, both at the Daresbury laboratory and elsewhere, and the extent to which retraining and redeployment can be achieved.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much the Science and Engineering Research Council will save by the closure of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Science and Engineering Research Council estimates that, after the costs associated with the closure itself have been met, the net saving will be some £5 million a year released for other, higher priority science.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed closure of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury on the facility to undertake world-leading nuclear physics research in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The impact of a scientific decision such as this is a matter which the research councils are best placed to assess. The Office of Science and Technology will not seek to make a separate judgment.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total expenditure by Duchy of Lancaster's Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Duchy of Lancaster advertises in some national and local newspapers as part of the administration of intesteces as required by statute. Sums spent and estimates are as follows:

Newspaper advertising	£
1979-80	13,899·34
1980-81	11,779·80
1981-82	14,305·41

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proportion of registered disabled persons employed by the Cabinet Office is 1·3 per cent. The Cabinet Office is an equal opportunities employer, and continually seeks to encourage the employment of people with disabilities.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is the policy of my Department to pay bills promptly. The timing of payment is normally stipulated in contracts or on suppliers' invoices. Where it is not, the Department's aim is to pay within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice.

To help encourage prompt payment by our contractors to their sub-contractors, a clause has been added to the Department's standard terms of contract requiring the contractors to pay their sub-contractors within the same time scale.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Waldegrave: The publication has been made available to those staff in my Department, including its executive agencies, who have a particular interest in purchasing or bill paying.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give separate figures for the spending by the Duchy of Lancaster on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Duchy of Lancaster advertises in some national and local newspapers as part of the administration of intesteces as required by statute. Sums spent and estimates are as follows:

Newspaper advertising
1979-80	13,899·34

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he received the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils relating to the 1992 public expenditure survey; if he will publish that advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I received the Advisory Board for the Research Councils' advice on 1 May. It was offered to me in confidence and I have no plans to publish it.

Dr. Bray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the advice received from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils relating to the 1992 public expenditure survey included a request for the publication of that advice.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Darwen Magistrates Court

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what decision has been reached about the future of Darwen magistrates court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As mentioned in my letter of 27 May 1992 to the hon. Member, the Lord Chancellor has carefully considered the appeal by Lancashire county council against the Lancashire magistrates courts committee's determination to close this courthouse and has found the courts committee's decision to be soundly based; he has therefore dismissed the appeal.

Court Administration Procedures

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has any plans to review the court administration procedures to encourage better use of both court time and police resources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We are taking forward a number of measures in both the Crown court and the magistrates courts aimed at better use of court and police resources. These include action to implement the recommendations of the inter-agency working group on pre-trial issues concerning the listing of cases and the communication of information between the courts and other agencies; the creation of a magistrates' courts inspectorate with a brief to promote best practice in this and other areas; and research into delays in the Crown court.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what percentage of the total work force in his department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: At 1 June 1991 the percentage of people registered as disabled was 1·5 per cent. The figure relates only to those staff registered as disabled. There are other staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

The Lord Chancellor's Department is taking steps to implement the civil service code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities. In advertising vacancies, disabled people are encouraged to apply. Application forms are available in braille and on tape. Applicants can take a short answer test if they do not possess the necessary educational qualifications. Interviews are offered to all registered disabled applicants with the necessary qualifications who pass the short answer test. Care is taken to ensure that the criteria for recruitment are defined in terms of the needs of the job and that disabled persons are not unfairly excluded. At the point of selection preference is given to a registered disabled person if otherwise the respective merits of the candidates are evenly based. A budget is available for the purchase of any equipment that might assist a disabled person to carry out a job. Recruiters and managers are given guidance on the employment of people with disabilities.

Jurors

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether a person whose knowledge of the English language is limited is normally appointed to serve as a juror if his or her name comes forward by way of the random process of selection of jury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The summons sent to potential jurors explains that a person may apply for excusal from jury service on the grounds of an insufficient understanding of English. In addition if there is doubt that a person summoned under the Juries Act 1974 would be able to act effectively as a juror on account of an insufficient understanding of English the judge shall determine whether or not he or she should act as a juror. If the judge decides the person cannot act effectively as a juror, the summons shall be discharged.

Legal Aid

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations he has held with the Law Society before issuing the recent circular to justices' clerks concerning the conditions attached to the availability of legal aid for defendants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. The Law Society had an opportunity to comment on the rules governing the availability of criminal legal aid in 1989 during the passage of regulations associated with the Legal Aid Act 1988. The circular provides advice and guidance to justices' clerks on the administration of criminal legal aid regulations.

Mr. Byers: To ask the the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if his Department has sought any independent legal advice on the lawfulness of their recent circular to justices' clerks concerning the conditions attached to the availability of legal aid for defendants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has access to legal advice from a variety of sources, but it is not the normal practice to reveal the source of legal advice in any particular case.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications for duty solicitor schemes of the recent circular from his Department to justices' clerks concerning the conditions attached to the availability of legal aid for defendants.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The circular was not concerned with the operation of the duty solicitor schemes.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate was made of the additional costs incurred as a result of the introduction of his Department's recent circular to justices' clerks concerning the conditions attached to the availability of legal aid of (a) cases being adjourned and (b) defendants being remanded in custody whilst proof of income is obtained.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. The purpose of the circular was to provide advice and guidance on the proper application of the regulations for the grant of criminal legal aid.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Scottish Heritage

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what jurisdiction he has over the national heritage of Scotland; and how this compares with his responsibilities in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Key: The responsibilities of the Secretary of State for National Heritage in relation to heritage matters in Scotland broadly follow the territorial division of responsibilities which existed prior to the creation of the Department of National Heritage. Responsibilities of the Secretary of State which extend to Scotland are; sponsorship of the National Heritage Memorial Fund; the work of the Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites; the Great Britain Sports Council and the international promotion of British Sport; British Screen Finance; European Co-production Fund; Audio Visual Eureka; Film Certification; the United Kingdom Film Commission; the MEDIA programme; the National Film and Television School; the British Film Institute; the work of the Reviewing Committee on the Export Works of Art; broadcasting; the British Library and the performing arts. He consults the Secretary of State for Scotland on these matters where appropriate.

Responsibility for national museums and galleries, public libraries, acceptance of works of art in lieu of tax, the Government indemnity scheme and tourism in Scotland lies with the Secretary of State for Scotland.

The Secretary of State's responsibilities in Scotland do not extend to the acceptance of property or works of art in satisfaction of tax or the policy and funding of film culture as they do in Wales; otherwise his responsibilities in Wales and Scotland are broadly similar. In Northern Ireland, he does not have responsibility for the performing arts, museums and galleries, libraries, tourism, heritage matters or sport and recreation.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: This information is not held centrally and at this time could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department of National Heritage will be committed to the implementation of the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service.

Welsh Heritage

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement outlining what responsibilities his Department will have regarding heritage issues in Wales.

Mr. Key: The responsibilities of the Secretary of State for National Heritage in relation to Wales broadly follow the territorial division of responsibilities which existed prior to the creation of the Department of National Heritage. Responsibilities of the Secretary of State which extend to Wales include: sponsorship of the National Heritage Memorial Fund; acceptance of property in satisfaction of tax; the work of the Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites; the GB Sports Council and the international promotion of British Sport; British Screen Finance; European Co-production Fund; Audio Visual Eureka; Film Certification; the UK Film Commission; the MEDIA Programme; the National Film and Television School; the Crafts Council; the British Film Institute; policy and funding for film culture; the business sponsorship incentive scheme; acceptance of works of art in lieu of tax; the work of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art; broadcasting; the performing arts; the British Library and the Public Lending Right. He consults the Secretary of State for Wales on these matters where appropriate.

Responsibility for national museums and galleries, public libraries, the Government indemnity scheme and tourism in Wales lies with the Secretary of State for Wales.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—A Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Mellor: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Mellor: The Department of National Heritage, and its executive agency and non-departmental public bodies are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payments should normally be stipulated in contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, reimbursement should be made within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their subcontractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its subcontractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactive Seaweed, Cumbria

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the discovery of radioactive seaweed on the beaches of west Cumbria near Sellafield and its possible repercussions on the purity of laver bread eaten in south Wales.

Mr. Curry: In the course of the environmental monitoring programme which the Government require British Nuclear Fuels (BNFL) to undertake, material of weed-like appearance, known as hydroids, contaminated with very low levels of radioactivity, has been found on beaches in the Sellafield area. Hydroids are, in fact, inedible animal material similar to coral. We should not expect the findings to have any implication for the food chain, and this is confirmed by recent results from the Ministry's own monitoring programme.

The risk associated with direct exposure of the skin to this material is extremely low. Nevertheless, we require BNFL to clear contaminated material from beaches. The circumstances behind the incident are being investigated and we shall ensure that steps are taken to avoid a recurrence.

Sell-by Dates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of people prosecuted and convicted for selling food after the date shown in a use-by date relating to it in each year since 1984.

Mr. Soames: This information is not available centrally.

The enforcement of food labelling regulations, including those relating to the date marking of foods, is the responsibility of individuala local authorities.

The requirement to apply use-by date marks was introduced on 1 January 1991. There would have been no prosecutions for the sale of food after the date shown in a use-by date before 1 January 1991.

Bee Diseases

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what success he has had in action against the varroa mite and related bee disease.

Mr. Curry: Following the discovery of varroasis in the United Kingdom on 5 April controls were put in place to minimise the spread of the disease and an extensive survey of apiaries carried out to check the extent of the infestation. An infected area has been declared and movement into or out of that area is prohibited except under licence. Inspection and sampling outside the infected area revealed no evidence of the varroa mite. We are aware, however, that the mite is difficult to detect in the early stages of infestation. We are, therefore, continuing to keep the situation under close review and are prepared to amend the infected area if the disease is found outside its boundaries. The approval of veterinary medicines for the control of varroasis is being expedited.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what conclusions he has reached on the future use of organo-phosphorus sheep dip substances, following consultation with the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Soames: Under the European Community rules, all long-standing licensed pharmaceutical veterinary medicines, including sheep dips, are currently subject to a comprehensive review. The purpose of this review is to ensure that such products meet the most up to date standards on safety, quality and efficacy.

The independent Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has recently completed the initial phase of its review of sheep dips. It has concluded that, at present, there is no clear evidence that these products cause any unacceptable level of health risk to humans when used in accordance with the label instructions. Nevertheless, the VPC has noted that certain aspects of the products and conditions of use need further evaluation and the companies concerned are being asked to provide additional data. These, together with reports of suspected adverse reactions, will then be considered by the VPC. On the basis of the VPC's advice, decisions will then be taken by the licensing authority on the future authorisation of sheep dip products.

Health and Safety Executive officials attend VPC meetings and are represented on an appraisal panel set up to consider reports of human suspected adverse reactions to sheep dips.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the use of organo-phosphorus sheep dip substances should continue to be authorised and encouraged, that the medical knowledge available to users is adequate for their protection and that the substances should continue to be excluded from control under the pesticide regulations.

Mr. Soames: Sheep dips are classified as veterinary medicines. Before any veterinary medicine can be placed on the market, it must first be licensed in accordance with the Medicines Act 1968. Licences are issued only after the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC) has satisfied itself that the required standards of safety, quality and efficacy have been met. The assessment of safety includes that of operators using the product.

As part of the current review of licensed sheep dip products the VPC has recently advised that, at present, there is no clear evidence that these products cause any unacceptable level of health risk to humans when used in accordance with the label instructions. No medical knowledge is necessary to follow these instructions nor to comply with the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations.

Nevertheless, the VPC has noted a need for further evaluation of certain aspects of these products and conditions of use and the companies concerned have been asked to provide additional information. Information requested includes studies of farm operators, including blood tests and details of protective clothing worn as well as studies to show which areas of the bodies of operators are most exposed. This further data will be considered by the VPC on whose advice decisions on the future authorisation of sheep dip products will be made.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the regulations governing dipping for sheep scab to protect the health of those undertaking this task.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

All sheep dipping operations are subject to the general requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 (HSW Act) and to the more specific requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988. These regulations apply to employers and the self-employed. They require assessment of health risks from chemicals, prevention or control of exposure and, where necessary, health surveillance and exposure monitoring. If the regulations are complied with, the health of those exposed during dipping should not be put at risk.

Employers and operators are responsible for complying with the HSW Act and the regulations. They are vigorously enforced by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Curry: Public opinion surveys carried out by my Department since 1 November 1991 are as follows:

"Foodsense" information campaign—evaluation research.
"Foodsense" new booklets—evaluation research.
"Joint Imports and Rabies Control"—awareness assessment research.
1992 touring exhibition programme—evaluation research.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: The annual costs of fees paid by the Department (excluding agencies) to management consultants, excluding computer consultants, since 1984-85 are set out in the table. Data for earlier years can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Under decentralised budgeting arrangements in MAFF, there is no central provision for such consultancies in 1992-93. Any which are commissioned will have to be funded from the general running cost allocated to the units concerned. Decisions will therefore be taken as necessary during the year.

Financial year	Expenditure (£)
1984-85	27,110
1985-86	174,724
1986-87	135,279
1987-88	44,015
1988-89	162,114
1989-90	143,150
1990-91	129,817
1991-92	441,351

Farmed Fish

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals for the introduction of a welfare code in respect of farmed fish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Welfare standards for farmed fish are expected to be developed in the Council of Europe. We will participate constructively in these negotiations.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: The information required for the financial years 1979-80 to 1983-84 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The figures for subsequent years are as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	3·2
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	3·0
1987-88	0·6
1988-89	0·8
1989-90	1·1
1990-91	0·5
1991-92	0·6
1992-93	[1]0·6

[1]Forecast.

Figures for the years 1984-85 to 1986-87 refer to the total cost of press services and paid publicity which could be separated to show expenditure on press services only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1987-88 to 1992-93 relate to press services alone.

Bio-fuels

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to promote further research into the production and viability of bio-fuels as an alternative agricultural product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government conduct some research into potential biofuel crops, the scale of which is kept under review. However, whether biofuels are produced and marketed will ultimately depend on the economics. At present biofuels such as biodiesel cost about three times as much to produce as fuels from conventional sources.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was granted to farmers in England and Wales through the ESA scheme in 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: The total amount paid to farmers under the ESA scheme in England and Wales during 1990-91 was £8,341,000.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department employs 141·5 (1·4 per cent.) staff who are registered as disabled, counting part-timers as half units. These figures do not include staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

The Department is fully committed to the policies and good employment practices set out in the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service. Officials are making every effort to ensure that both policies and practices are implemented effectively and sensitively, in order to increase access for people with disabilities to the full range of recruitment and career development opportunities available, irrespective of whether they have chosen to register. The Department also participates in schemes designed to increase opportunities for the employment and retention of people with disabilities such as the sheltered placement scheme.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was granted to farmers in England and Wales through the farm diversification scheme in 1990-91; and if he will give a breakdown of this expenditure between the various activities eligible for grants.

Mr. Soames: A total of £2,765,691 was paid in grants under the farm diversification grant scheme in England and Wales in 1990-91. A breakdown of these figures by the various eligible enterprises is set out in the table.

Grant paid to farmers in England and Wales by eligible enterprise 1990-91

Enterprise type	Grant paid £
Manufacture of craft items	20,595
Food processing	237,288
Timber processing	28,482
Non-food agricultural produce	76,110
Repair of agricultural machinery	5,635
Farm shops	197,264
Pick your own sales	9,530
Tourist accommodation	1,376,741
Catering	83,629
Recreation and education	346,977
Horse enterprises	184,487
Letting of land or buildings for any of the above	89,606
Sub-total	2,656,344
Feasibility and marketing grants	109,347
Total	2,765,691

Abattoirs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to use a different health mark for meat produced from low-throughput abattoirs and those operating under temporary structural derogations.

Mr. Soames: Meat fit for human consumption produced in low throughput abattoirs and abattoirs operating under temporary structural derogations will be given the national health mark.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Curry: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Curry: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their subcontractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its subcontractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Pig Slurry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what domestic or EC proposals he expects to be made to make the disposal of all pig slurry subject to compulsory processing through registered processing plants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I know of no such proposals.

Flora and Fauna

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals on the protection of flora and fauna have been put forward by his Department for inclusion in the United Kingdom submissions for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Brazil in June.

Mr. Curry: Protection of flora and fauna is an important feature of the recently completed biodiversity convention and the agenda 21 proposals which will be before the conference. The lead on this is taken by the Department of the Environment, but our officials have been active in helping to achieve constructive proposals.

Veal Crates

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many calves have been exported from Britain to be reared in veal crates in EC countries since veal crate farming was banned in Britain.

Mr. Soames: During the period 1 January 1990 to 2 May 1992, a total of 839,820 calves intended for further fattening were exported from Great Britain to other EC countries. It is not possible to determine what proportion were for rearing in veal crates.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: Expenditure by the Department in the financial year 1982-83 and each subsequent year was as follows:

	(a) TV	(b) Radio	(c) Press advertising	(d) Other publicity material
	£	£	£	£
1982-83	nil	nil	3,000	n/a
1983-84	nil	nil	27,000	n/a
1984-85	nil	nil	26,000	575,000
1985-86	nil	nil	29,000	656,000
1986-87	nil	nil	54,000	825,000
1987-88	nil	nil	12,000	693,000
1988-89	nil	nil	380,000	1,004,000
1989-90	nil	nil	116,000	2,373,000
1990-91	nil	nil	53,000	2,379,000
1991-92	159,000	nil	103,000	4,135,000
[1]1992-93	500,000	nil	203,774	3,783,226

[1] Forecast.

Figures for publicity advertising prior to 1982-83 are not available as the information for those years includes recruitment and other types of advertising. Information is not readily available to distinguish between expenditure on advertising in newspapers and that in the press generally. Separate figures for expenditure on other publicity material prior to 1984-85 are available only at disproportionate cost.

Vitamin Pills

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about EC proposals to reclassify vitamin pills from food supplements to medicines available on doctor's prescriptions only.

Mr. Soames: The question of establishing acceptable upper levels for vitamins and minerals as a possible basis for future legislation is under consideration by the EC Scientific Committee for Food. We do not expect the Commission to make proposals on possible controls on vitamins or mineral pills until that process is complete.

Alcoholic Drinks

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring his Department carries out of the alcoholic strength of spirits on sale in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: The monitoring of the alcoholic strength of spirits at retail level is the responsibility of local food authorities, which undertake routine monitoring of alcoholic drinks.

WALES

Ancient Woodlands

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement about changes affecting the area of ancient semi-natural woodland since 1962;

(2) if he will make it part of his planning policy to prevent any further loss of ancient semi-natural woodland.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment today.

Rural Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made with the rural initiative launched by the Welsh Office; if he will detail specific changes of policy and specific additional resources associated with this initiative; and what is his future plan of action for taking this initiative forward.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State announced the launch of the rural initiative in February 1991, when he confirmed a £20 million increase in resources to tackle the problems of rural Wales. Around 75 per cent. of that sum was targeted on additional housing provision, assistance for local authority projects, and higher spending by the Welsh Development Agency. The balance of £5 million was made available for capital projects put forward by authorities which were likely to be of most benefit to the development of rural communities.

Subsequently, my right hon. Friend and I undertook extensive consultations with local authorities, the various agencies and other representative bodies, to seek their views on a way forward for rural Wales in the 1990s. We were very much encouraged by the unanimity of support for the initiative, and published in December 1991 "The Rural Initiative—putting the heart into rural Wales", the document which set out our objectives and policies for rural Wales.

My right hon. Friend also announced at the same time a fresh series of measures to consolidate and take forward rural programmes across the economic, social and environmental fields. In addition to already announced extra funds for the Development Board for Rural Wales and the national parks, totalling over £3 million, a further £29 million has thus been made available for capital projects, rural housing provision, and extra resources for the WDA, the Countryside Council for Wales and the Wales tourist board.

Turning specifically to the capital grants scheme, the total allocation for 1992-93 is £6 million, a 20 per cent. increase on the first year, when 265 applications were submitted by authorities and 36 approved for funding. For the current year, 308 applications were received and successful projects put forward by west Wales authorities have been announced. We hope shortly to be in a position to confirm successful applications for the rest of Wales for the current year.

I am writing to the hon. Gentleman to provide fuller details of the policies and additional resources associated with this initiative.

With the introduction of these measures, I believe we now have a very powerful range of organisations and resources to press ahead vigorously with development of the economic, social and environmental fabric of rural Wales, and to secure for it the long-term prosperity which is our common objective. Our policies for rural areas will continue to be reviewed in response to identified demands, as of course they are for the whole of Wales.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. David Hunt: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by HM Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results, the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. David Hunt: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

Dentists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what representations he has received on the state of morale among national health service dentists in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from national health service dentists in Wales concerning a new fee structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received a number of letters from general dental practitioners concerning the general dental service. The proposed reduction in fees which was announced in February has been suspended, and discussions are taking place between health departments and the dental professions' representatives to review the level of payments in 1991-92. The results of these discussions are to be announced as soon as possible. A fundamental review of the system for dental remuneration is also being jointly undertaken with the profession.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many national health service dentists there are in Wales;

(2) how many dentists practise in the county of Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: The requested information is given in the table.

	Wales	Clwyd
General Dental Practitioners[1]
Unrestricted principals	815	109
Assistants	9	—
Vocational trainees	29	7
Hospital Dental Staff[2]	119	7
Community Dental Staff[2]	121	15

[1] Provisional figures as at 31 March 1992.
[2] All grades of permanent staff (excluding clinical assistants) in post as at 30 September 1990.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many national health service dentists in Wales have notified him of their intention to enter private practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None. Dentists who wish to cease providing NHS treatment are required to give notice to either the family health services authority with which they are in contract or, in the case of hospital or community dentists, their employing authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what meetings he has had with the leaders of national health service dentists in Wales concerning fee structures.

Mr. David Hunt: NHS dentists in Wales are represented in negotiations which are conducted with health departments, including the Welsh Office, at United Kingdom level. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has agreed to meet elected representatives of the profession in Wales when the outcome of the current negotiations is known.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many national health service dentists have left the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available but the table gives the number of dentists in Wales for each of the last five available years:

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
General Dental Practitioners[1]

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have received dental treatment in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available, but the total number of courses of dental treatment is given in the table:

Courses of dental treatment (thousands)

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
General dental service:
Adults	1,135·5	1,167·0	1,266·6	1,197·1	1,189·9
Children	623·4	621·3	634·7	620·6	[1]n/a

Hospital Dental Service
New Out-patients	38·3	40·5	42·3	44·4	47·1

[1] The number of courses of treatment for children is no longer available as dentists are now paid on a per capita basis. However at 31 March 1992 there were 361,498 children registered with a dentist in Wales which represents 55 per cent. of the population of under-18s.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dental practices have gone bankrupt in Wales over the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Statistics relating to bankruptcies are collected by the Department of Trade and Industry and published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. The detailed information requested is not available from this source. Figures for Wales are combined with those for England and dental practices are not identified separately.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: The available information is as follows:

Welsh Office publicity spend

£000

Year	Radio	TV	Joint press and TV	Press	Other
1979-80	Nil	—	61	—	24
1980-81	Nil	—	62	—	22

1990-91	Nil	17	—	351	1,161
1991-92	Nil	4	—	221	1,332

[1] Television and Press advertising for the years 1979-85 cannot be readily separated.
[2] Provisional outturn.

Publicity expenditure in 1992-93 is expected to be about £2 million. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of this under each heading because in many cases decisions about the extent to which different media will be used are taken as projects develop.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what weekly payment is made by training and enterprise councils in Wales to participants in the enterprise allowance scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The TECs have considerable discretion to respond to local needs in operating the enterprise allowance scheme and the weekly payments may be in the range of £20 to £90 for duration from 66 weeks to 26 weeks.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fluoride

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made in artificially increasing the fluoride content of the water supply during the most recent 12-month period for which information is available.

Mr. Hanley: No water fluoridation schemes have been implemented in the past 12 months. Following approval in principle by the Department of Health and Social Services, public consultation has taken place on the fluoridation of Dunore Point water scheme. Confirmation of the approval, and approval in principle to the fluoridation of a further scheme at Silent Valley, should be given shortly.

BSE

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the trend of evidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in livestock.

Mr. Hanley: The incidence of BSE in Northern Ireland is very low. Up to 21 May 1992 only 414 cases have been confirmed in a herd of 1·3 million cattle. The incidence of the disease is expected to increase for at least a further year when it is hoped that the ban on feeding ruminant-derived protein should begin to show visible results.

Weekly Newspapers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply of 18 May, Official Report, column 37, which printing houses in Northern Ireland were directed to the attention of the local enterprise development unit in connection with the grant application by The Cross Examiner, before LEDU approved the grant of £16,000.

Mr. Atkins: The grant application contained financial projections based on a price quoted by Ronan Press.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Mates: The following public opinion surveys have been carried out since 1 November 1991:

Northern Ireland Continuous Household Survey
Household Survey on Ownership of Smoke Detectors
Road Safety Advertising Recall
Road Safety Monitor
Rate Collection Agency—opinion survey in respect of service to the public
Lower Ormeau Training Needs Survey
Lower Duncairn Residents and Businesses Survey
Belfast Residents' Survey
Training & Employment Agency Customer Attitude Survey
Social Security Agency—survey of customer opinion of the services provided.

Ards Hospital

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are presently in Boyd house at the Ards hospital; what capacity is unused at present; and if he will make a statement on the future of Boyd house.

Mr. Hanley: There are 37 patients in Boyd house, and 15 beds are presently unoccupied. The organisation of services at local level is a matter for health and social services boards. The Eastern board is currently reviewing its acute hospital services and intends to issue a public consultation document within the next three to four weeks. The outcome of this review will have a bearing on the future role of the Ards hospital in the provision of services to elderly people.

Agricultural Colleges

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students are attending each of the agricultural colleges in the current year; and what were the equivalent figures five years ago.

Mr. Hanley: The total number of students and trainees enrolled on full-time, part-time and short, in-service training courses in the 1986-87 and 1991-92 academic years was as follows:

		Full-time courses	Part-time courses	Short courses	[12] All courses
Enniskillen College of Agriculture	1986-87	42	19	[1]389	450

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Mates: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Expenditure (£)
1979-80	281,641
1980-81	344,596
1981-82	393,239
1982-83	519,912

Airport Privatisation

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library the Hambros Bank Ltd report on the privatisation of Northern Ireland airports commissioned by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: I am unable to do so for a number of reasons. The Hambros report is confidential to the Government and any disclosure of the facts or opinions contained in the report may be commercially damaging to Northern Ireland Airports Limited and may adversely affect the terms upon which privatisation can be achieved. The report also contains information of a security sensitive nature.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: At 22 May 1992 there were 1,272 staff in the Northern Ireland civil service—4·3 per cent. of the service—who reported themselves as having a disability. Of these 443—1·5 per cent. of the service—were, or had been, registered as disabled. In addition, 45 registered disabled people were working in the Northern Ireland civil service under the sheltered placement scheme. No-one currently in the small home civil service staff group in the Northern Ireland Office is registered disabled.

As equal opportunities employers the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland civil service—NICS—encourage people with disabilities to apply for appointment. This is emphasised in all recruitment campaigns and advertising. Qualifications are waived for registered disabled persons for all posts in the NICS which include an aptitude test as part of the selection procedure. Every effort is made to enable people with disabilities to present themselves to best advantage and practical arrangements are made where required, for example, test papers in Braille or enlarged print, use of interpreters and so on. Where the merits of candidates are evenly balanced at interview, preference is given to a registered disabled person. Recruiting officers in the Northern Ireland Office receive disability awareness training, and all disabled applicants who meet the criteria are automatically invited for interview.

There is a comprehensive code of practice, "The Employment of Disabled People in the Northern Ireland Civil Service", a copy of which is included in the third report of the service's equal opportunities unit published in October 1989, and is available in the Library.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Mates: The director of the Government Purchasing Service for Northern Ireland, formerly the central unit on purchasing (Northern Ireland), issued a directive on payments policy to all purchasing staff across the Northern Ireland civil service and related non-departmental public bodies on 28 December 1989. This stated that all public sector buying organisations should implement a declared commercially acceptable payment policy. The recommended policy was to have quick payment where prompt payment discount was offered and to pay after a stated interval of between 30 and 60 days without a discount.

Reviews of payment performance since that date have shown that the payment of bills is no longer an identifiable problem for public sector suppliers in Northern Ireland.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—A Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Atkins: The publication has been circulated to the Department of Economic Development and to the local enterprise development unit, the organisation responsible for the promotion and development of small firms within Northern Ireland. The document is available at LEDU's headquarters and in each of its seven regional offices.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Mates: The information could be obtained in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. The total figures for spending on all advertising and other promotional material are, however, set out in the table:

1979-80	468,972
1980-81	487,393
1981-82	613,464
1982-83	1,550,896
1983-84	2,853,451
1984-85	2,699,659
1985-86	3,916,824
1986-87	3,787,628

Cohesion Fund

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been allocated to the cohesion fund within the context of the agreement between the European Community and EFTA countries; when it becomes operational; how many applications for support from the cohesion fund have been submitted from Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: The EC/EFTA treaty which was signed on 2 May and comes into force on 1 January 1993 will bring the EFTA countries into the Communities' single internal market. The treaty includes provision for a financial mechanism aimed to assist certain member states and less favoured regions to cope with the competitive pressures arising from the agreement and to contribute to the reduction of regional, social and economic disparity. The island of Ireland including Northern Ireland will benefit from this assistance.

Two types of financial assistance will be available under this mechanism in the form of interest rebates on loans and direct grants. The total volume of loans for which interest rebate will be available will be 1,500 million ecu. The total amount of grant available will be 500 million ecu.

The assistance will be disbursed through the European investment bank and particular emphasis will be placed on the environment, transport, education and training. The allocation of the assistance between member states will be decided by the Community.

When financial allocations are known suitable projects will be submitted.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what criteria are used in determining whether teachers in the controlled sector taking early retirement can receive added years or other enhancement of pension;

(2) what criteria are used in determining whether teachers in the maintained sector taking early retirement can receive added years or other enhancement of pension; by whom the decision is taken; and what report of such decisions is made to the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: In the case of controlled and maintained schools with fully delegated budgets, decisions on pension enhancement are taken by boards of governors; in the case of special schools and schools with partially delegated budgets, decisions are taken by the education and library boards in respect of the controlled sector, by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools—CCMS—in respect of Catholic maintained schools and by the boards of governors of non-Catholic maintained schools.

In taking these decisions, boards of governors, education and library boards and the CCMS take account of guidance issued by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland, which recommends maximum levels of compensation related to years of service and which contains points to be considered when awarding pensions and lump sum enhancements. These include: whether enhancement is necessary to achieve the premature retirement; whether the full level of enhancement provided for is justified; the circumstances leading to the teacher becoming a candidate for premature retirement; the teacher's effectiveness; factors relating to the school's organisation and management.

Enhancement decisions also take account of guidance issued by the relevant education and library board and the CCMS and of the total cash made available by my Department to the board for the premature retirement compensation scheme.

The various deciding authorities notify the Department of Education of the name of the teacher, the date on which premature retirement is to take effect, and the level of enhancement.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on events in the female wing of Maghaberry prison on 2 March.

Mr. Mates: Following the receipt of information that a serious breach of security may have occurred, it was necessary to initiate a full search of Mourne house and its inmates.

Difficulties arose on 2 March because a number of prisoners decided to resist the legitimate attempts of staff to undertake the search in accordance with the prescribed procedures for such searches. Because of their resistance it was necessary, physically, to restrain them in order to facilitate the search. This was achieved without serious injury to the prisoners. Two members of the board of visitors and a prison chaplain were present throughout the search.

Full searching is an essential component of prison security policy which is practised not only in the United Kingdom but in the Republic of Ireland, in western European countries and in the USA.

Rural Development

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the members of the Rural Development Council; and what criteria were employed to select the most deprived rural areas for the purposes of the rural development initiative.

Mr. Hanley: The membership of the Northern Ireland Rural Development Council is as follows:

Jimmy Armstrong
Executive Chairman

Pat Jess
Open University Lecturer

John Kelly
Lending Manager, Allied Irish Bank

Aideen McGinley
Member of Community Development Review Group

Patsy McShane
Chief Executive, Workspace (Draperstown) Ltd.

Malcolm Woods
Chief Executive, Leckpatrick Holdings Ltd.

Robert Hanna
Deputy Chairman, Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside (CNCC)

Mark Conway
Chairman, Rural Community Network

John Donaghy
Chairman, Omagh Forum for Community Associations

Paul McAllister
Chairman, Glens of Antrim Rural and Community Development Association

John McGrady
Member of Rural Community Network

John Fee
Newry and Mourne District Council

Warren Loane
Fermanagh District Council

Malachy McSparran
Moyle District Council

Hugh Linehan
Vice President, Ulster Farmers' Union (UFU)

Wilfred Mitchell
Chairman, Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers' Association (NIAPA)

The most deprived rural areas of Northern Ireland—West Fermanagh, the Sperrins, the western shore of Lough Neagh, South Armagh/South Down and the glens of Antrim/Rathlin—were identified by the interdepartmental committee on rural development—IDCRD—after the application of combinations of standard criteria used to assess social and economic need, including geographic and social isolation, high unemployment, demographic imbalances, declining services and poor facilities. The IDCRD also established that pockets of deprivation can be isolated in most rural areas on a ward or townland basis.

EDUCATION

Law Examinations

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will arrange for the Law Society final examination and the Bar final examination to be treated in the same way as the post graduate certificate of education in respect of eligibility for mandatory awards.

Mr. Forman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 22 May 1992 at col. 265.

Postgraduate Degrees

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will state (a) how many people were awarded undergraduate degrees by United Kingdom institutions in each year from 1974 to date, (b) how many people commenced postgraduate degree courses in each of these years and (c) how many of those commencing courses were in receipt of Government-funded postgraduate awards.

Mr. Forman: The number of undergraduates awarded degrees from United Kingdom higher education institutions were as follows:

	Number
1980-81	105,000
1981-82	102,000
1982-83	100,500
1983-84	116,000
1984-85	121,400
1985-86	121,200
1986-87	124,700
1987-88	127,300
1988-89	129,600

The number of students commencing postgraduate degree courses at higher education institutions in the United Kingdom for each of the academic years 1979-80 to 1990-91 were as follows:

	Number
1979-80	55,400
1980-81	56,000
1981-82	59,900
1982-83	57,500
1983-84	61,000
1984-85	63,600
1985-86	68,500
1986-87	73,000
1987-88	74,000
1988-89	78,900
1989-90	85,400
1990-91	98,000

The figures for postgraduate students in receipt of Government-funded awards were as follows:

	Number
1979-80	10,500
1980-81	10,400
1981-82	9,300
1982-83	9,100
1983-84	9,000
1985-86	9,500
1986-87	9,300
1987-88	8,700
1988-89	8,700
1989-90	9,400

Sparsholt Agricultural College

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects loan sanction to be given for the first stage of the expenditure by Sparsholt agricultural college, Hampshire to provide additional library and classroom facilities.

Mr. Forth: Hampshire education authority's bid for a supplementary credit approval for 1992-93 for major building works at Sparsholt college, including additional library and classroom facilities, is currently being considered along with bids from other authorities. Decisions on the bids will be announced shortly.

School Buildings, Rossendale

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take into account the severe weather conditions in the Rossendale Valley in future capital allocations for school buildings.

Mr. Forth: Capital resources for local authority maintained schools are distributed on the basis of national priority criteria. These criteria—which were agreed with local authority associations—give priority to the second and third year costs of work approved under earlier allocations, new school places needed in areas of population growth, and projects to remove surplus places. The remaining resources are then largely distributed to contribute towards the cost of all other capital work including improvement and replacement projects. Local authorities are responsible for the state of their school buildings, and for deciding expenditure levels and priorities from the resources available to them.

For voluntary aided schools, governors are responsible for effecting repairs to school buildings and the Secretary of State is under a duty to provide grant of 85 per cent. towards the cost of such. Applications for approval to carry out repairs are dealt with throughout the year as the need arises and are not covered by the annual capital allocations system.

Bids for capital grant from grant-maintained schools are looked at on their individual merits in direct competition with those received from the other grant-maintained schools. Priority in making allocations is given to work required on urgent health and safety grounds.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Forman: Since 1 November 1991, the Department has agreed to make a contribution from the research budget towards the family expenditure survey 1992-93.

Nursery Education, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the relevant indicators and factors relating to nursery education giving rise to the relevant standard spending assessment for Hampshire for 1992-93; and how much Hampshire county council has budgeted for that purpose.

Mr. Forth: The under-five education element of Hampshire's standard spending assessment for 1992-93 is £24·83 million. The indicators used in calculating this element are resident population aged 0-4, an additional educational needs factor and a factor for additional employment costs made on a regional basis. For Hampshire the values of these indicators are 103,485, 0·40505 and 1·05248 respectively.

It is for Hampshire county council to determine its spending priorities between and within services, including the level of its provision for nursery education.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: The expenditure figures for press and publicity by this Department for the financial years 1984-85 to 1992-93 are given in the table. Figures for 1979-80 to 1983-84 are not available on a comparable basis. The Department does not incur expenditure on public relations.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—A Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Forman: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of the prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results, that Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Forman: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. This Department's normal payment terms, unless others are stipulated contractually, are 30 days following receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment. The Department's contracts now contain a clause requiring suppliers to pay their sub-contractors promptly.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: The expenditure figures for advertising and other promotional materials by this Department for the financial years 1979-80 to 1991-92 are given in the table. The 1992-93 estimated budget is £4 million. Final decisions on media in the current financial year have not been taken.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what advice is given to schools concerning children who suffer from asthma in regard to the levels of pollution surrounding schools.

Mr. Forth: Medical paediatric advice is available to schools and to LEAs from the district health authority's community child health service. Individual children with asthma may be seen with their parents when advice may be given to the child and family, the teacher and the school with regard to the management in a particular case.

The child's general medical practitioner who has responsibility for his or her medical care, or the hospital paediatrician in more severe cases, may also give advice not only to the child and family but to the teacher and school.

The level of pollution in a particular area is a local matter and therefore the responsibility of the local director of public health and environmental health officer of the local authority. Those officers are available to offer or provide advice to the LEA or to individual schools through and with the community child health service.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the current indications of the number of schools facing shortages of funds due to the funding for teachers' salaries being calculated on an average rather than actual basis.

Mr. Forth: I have seen no evidence to suggest that many schools are facing shortage of funds as a result of the relative costs of their teachers. Local management of schools—LMS—means that schools that attract and retain pupils receive more money, and gives governing bodies the power to decide how best to spend that money for the benefit of pupils—including how many and which teachers to employ.

Student Loans and Awards

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to lay before the House revised mandatory awards regulations and student loans regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education has laid the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1992 before Parliament today. Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, he has also laid before Parliament the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1992.

The mandatory awards regulations come into force on 1 September and the loans regulations on 1 August.

The awards regulations apply to students living in England and Wales. They incorporate the unchanged main rates of grant, uprated supplementary allowances and revised contribution scales. These were announced by my predecessor on 9 March at columns 385-87. They also incorporate some minor changes in terms and conditions.

The loans regulations, which apply to students in Great Britain, provide for the new, higher rates of loan. They also include the 1992-93 income threshold governing the deferment of repayments. Borrowers who satisfy the Student Loans Company that their gross monthly income is £1,130 a month or less, equivalent to £13,560 a year, will be entitled to defer repayments for a year at a time.

Technology

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to review the content of national curriculum technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have agreed, in the light of the advice that I have received from the National Curriculum Council, that there is a case for a detailed review of the statutory order for technology in the national curriculum. The principal objectives of such a review will be to specify more clearly the skills and knowledge which pupils should acquire at each stage so that progression can be secured, to enhance the practical element, and to improve the manageability of the curriculum in the classroom. We are therefore asking Her Majesty's inspectors of schools to undertake an urgent review of the relevant statements of attainment and programmes of study, to allow Her Majesty's chief inspectors of schools for England and for Wales, when appointed, to report to us jointly in the autumn.

I am determined to increase teachers' expectations of childrens' abilities. This is vital for children and for their eventual employers. The more that children are encouraged to achieve the better their employment prospects.

The terms of reference of the review will be as follows:

1. To review the programmes of study for attainment targets 1-4 of the Education (National Curriculum) (Attainment Targets and Programmes of Study in Technology) Order 1990 so as to clarify what should be taught and in particular to ensure that the technical skills, knowledge and understanding of all pupils at all stages are developed through work with and in relation to construction materials and related components and systems.

2. To revise the existing statements of attainment and related non-statutory examples to facilitate the assessment of the skills, knowledge and understanding acquired by pupils and of the quality of their work and what they produce, and in particular to —identify and specify the skills and knowledge which pupils should acquire at each of the key stages, and indicate where appropriate how these could be developed through a range of technological activities;

—identify and specify the range, depth and level of teaching and learning appropriate to the skills and knowledge at each key stage, so that progression is secured;

—in the light of the above, to propose the apportionment of an appropriate range of materials and contexts across and within the four key stages; giving particular attention to reducing the complexity and amount of work required in each key stage, and to improving the manageability of the curriculum and assessment, particularly at the primary level;

—clarify how and when the skills, knowledge and understanding developed through other Curriculum Orders should be made use of in Technology (eg mathematics, science and art).

3. To design a framework for short courses at key stage 4, which maintains the basic conceptual approach of the Order, but offers within it a range of choices able to meet the needs of pupils of different interests and abilities and flexible enough to permit extension into or combination with other—particularly vocationally-oriented—areas of work or study.

On completion of the review my right hon. Friend and I will prepare our proposals for a new statutory order governing national curriculum technology, which will be subject to the full statutory process of consultation provided for in the Education Reform Act 1988. We would expect it to be possible for a revised order to be implemented in the schools in August 1994 for key stages 1, 2 and 3 (pupils up to 14) and in August 1995 for key stage 4 (14-16 year olds). In the meantime, the existing curriculum order will continue in force for key stages 1-3 and will be implemented as planned for key stage 4 in the autumn of 1993.

The School Examinations and Assessment Council will accordingly be publishing shortly its criteria for GCSE and equivalent examination syllabuses, which will apply to courses beginning in the autumn term 1993 and 1994. These are based upon the existing order but have been designed to take account of the objectives of the review I have announced today.

I am placing in the Library of the House the advice I have received from the National Curriculum Council and my reply.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will announce the membership of the Higher Education Funding Council for England; and what initial guidance he intends to give to the council.

Mr. Patten: I have announced today that the membership of the Higher Education Funding Council for England will be as follows:

Sir Ron Dearing (Chairman)
Chairman, Universities Funding Council/Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council

Professor Colin Campell
Vice-Chancellor, University of Nottingham

Professor Graeme Davies (Chief Executive)
Chief Executive, Universities Funding Council/ Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council

Professor Brian K. Follett
Professor of Zoology, University of Bristol and Biological Secretary, The Royal Society

Mr. Robert Gunn
Chairman-designate of the Further Education Funding Council for England

Professor Kay-Tee Khaw
Professor of Clinical Gerontology, University of Cambridge

Sir Idris Pearce
Chairman of Higher Education Funding Council for Wales

Sir Robert Scholey
Chairman, British Steel

Professor Jack Shaw
Deputy Governor, Bank of Scotland and Chairman—designate of Scottish Higher Education Funding Council

Miss Janet Trotter
Director, Cheltenham and Gloucester College of Higher Education

Professor David J. Watson
Director, Brighton Polytechnic

Sir David Phillips
Chairman, Advisory Board for the Research Councils

Dr. Rab Telfer
Executive Chairman, BSI Standards

Secretary of State's representative

Mr. J. M. M. Vereker
Deputy Secretary, Department for Education

Alternate: Mr. C. A. Clark

I have today sent a letter of guidance to the chairman of the council, and am placing a copy in the Library.

HEALTH

NHS Spending

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in each of the past five years, how much of the total spend on hospital and community health services has gone on (a) services to patients and (b) paying pensions and other payments to people no longer working for the national health service;

(2) in each of the past five years, how many people who no longer work for the national health service have been in receipt of payments from funds allocated to the provision of hospital and community health services.

Mr. Sackville: Retirement pensions are funded by contributory self-financing schemes which fall outside the hospital and community health services budget. The information requested on other payments to former NHS employees is not collected centrally.

NHS Security

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further steps she is taking to reduce the cost of crime on national health service budgets.

Mr. Sackville: Security arrangements at health service premises, are the responsibility of local managers.

The National Association of Health Authorities and Trusts has recently published (with financial assistance from the Department) the new edition of the "NHS Security Manual". The Department has provided copies for general managers and commended it to them as an excellent source of advice. A copy is also available in the Library.

Earlier this year the Department commissioned a study by management consultants of security issues at an NHS hospital. The report of the study is expected within the next few weeks.

Rural Access

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve access to health services in rural areas.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of each district health authority and family health services authority to meet the health needs of its resident population. If the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind, perhaps he will write to me.

Low Income Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the results of his Department's review of the health benefits low income scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Soon.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps she is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within her Department; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: At January 1992—the latest figures available—1·9 per cent. of the total workforce was registered disabled. In addition, a number of staff have a disability but are not registered. The Department is an equal opportunity employer and observes the code of practice for the employment of people with a disability issued by the Cabinet Office. At present the majority of recruitment is being undertaken by the NHS management executive which is to relocate from London to Leeds, where the new building has been designed specifically to allow easy access for people with disabilities. A recently published brochure outlining job opportunities within the management executive encourages applications from people with disabilities. In addition all job advertisements carry the recognised disability symbol which signifies that applications are welcomed from people with a disability who are suitably qualified.

Dental Services Payments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the report of the discussion groups on the level of general dental services payments.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The purpose of this report was to assist the joint inquiry of the health departments and the General Dental Services Committee in examining the reasons for the level of payments to dentists in 1991-92.

Low Income Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend the national health service low income scheme to provide that if a claim is made within three months of a charge being incurred for the cost of spectacles, a refund will be paid, on the same terms as for prescription charges, dental charges and eye tests; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: From 1 June 1992 the time limit for claiming a refund under the NHS low income scheme was extended to three months in respect of charges for prescriptions, dental treatment, wigs and fabric supports, spectacles prescribed by the hospital eye service, and fares to hospital for NHS treatment. The arrangements for other optical refunds are being considered as part of the review of administration of the NHS low income scheme.

Disability

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in the past 12 months about the implementation of the remaining sections of the Disabled Persons (Representation, Consultation and Services) Act 1986; what plans she has to implement these sections; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have received 73 letters concerning our decision not to implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons Act, seven of which also referred to section 7. The Act was also the subject of five parliamentary questions during this period.

The requirements of these sections are now, to a very large extent, reflected in our new and wide-ranging reforms of community care. The need to implement these sections of the Disabled Persons Act will be reviewed in the light of several years' experience of the community care arrangements.

Women's Health, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps her Department is taking in Liverpool to improve women's health care, particularly in relation to the prevention and treatment of cervical cancer; and what steps she is taking to ensure that the new Liverpool women's hospital will have adequate access via public transport.

Mr. Sackville: The provision of health services in Liverpool is the responsibility of Liverpool health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. M. F. Emberton, the authority chairman, for details.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to exempt cystic fibrosis sufferers from prescription charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to extend the range of conditions which currently attract free prescriptions on medical grounds. Extensive exemption and charge remission arrangements, coupled with the prescription prepayment certificate scheme, protect those who might otherwise have difficulty in paying prescription charges.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities are currently charging cystic fibrosis sufferers for nebulisers; and what is her Department's policy on making vital medical equipment available to the chronically ill.

Mr. Sackville: Health authorites cannot make charges for nebulisers, or other items of medical equipment supplied as part of NHS treatment, unless there is specific statutory provision for charges to be made.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cystic fibrosis sufferers there are in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) each family health services authority area and (c) each district health authority area.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the estimated annual cost of prescriptions is (a) to each cystic fibrosis sufferer and (b) to all cystic fibrosis sufferers across the United Kingdom.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available.

Surgeons (HIV Infection)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the guidelines concerning HIV infection following the infection of a surgeon at the Liverpool royal teaching hospital; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom health departments issued occupational guidance for health care workers in 1988. Revised guidelines "AIDS-HIV Infected Health Care Workers" containing recommendations of the Expert Advisory Group on AIDS were issued in December 1991. A copy is available in the Library. An advisory panel, chaired by Dame Mary Donaldson has been set up to provide advice in individual cases.

The guidance states that health care workers who know or suspect that they have been exposed to HIV infection must seek occupational advice and an HIV test if appropriate, and that those with HIV infection should not perform invasive surgical procedures.

The guidance also states that in certain circumstances health authorities and NHS trusts may consider it appropriate to notify patients who have undergone invasive procedures by a health care worker subsequently found to be infected with HIV.

In the recent case in Liverpool, the guidelines were followed. The surgeon concerned ceased work when HIV infection was suspected, and the health authority and hospital considered it appropriate to contact patients to offer reassurance, and HIV antibody tests if required. The guidelines are kept under review to reflect developing knowledge of HIV infection.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 20 May, Official Report, columns 172-73, why copies of the consultation document on the application by Greenwich health services for trust status were not available to members of the Greenwich community health council at its meeting on the evening of 14 May.

Dr. Mawhinney: In April Greenwich community health council was consulted by the regional health authority about arrangements for the public consultation exercises. Had it indicated that it required copies of the application for its meeting on 14 May, these would have been made available.

Hospital Information Systems

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the list and costs involved in providing the various hospital information systems.

Mr. Sackville: Hospital information systems are intended to support the operational needs of the units and local managers are responsible for deciding which systems to implement. Information about the cost of the various hospital information systems is not held centrally.

General Practitioners

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners in the area covered by the Redbridge and Waltham Forest family health services authority have become fundholders.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am informed by the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority that there is one GP fundholder and one GP in the preparatory year for fundholding in the area covered by the Redbridge and Waltham Forest family health services authority.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the joint Department of Health and Home Office review of services for mentally disordered offenders.

Mr. Yeo: The review continues to make good progress and is on schedule to complete its work in July.

In his reply on 13 November 1991 at columns 583-84 to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South East (Mr. Paice), the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, announced that we were publishing four initial reports for consultation. We have received some 200 responses. They have overwhelmingly supported the direction of development proposed in the reports. They also contained many detailed comments, for which we are most grateful.

We are today publishing for consultation five further reports submitted by the steering committee chaired by Dr. John Reed. Copies are available in the Library. These cover finance, staffing and training, research, academic development and services for mentally disordered offenders with special needs. The reports are being issued, as before, to a wide range of interested bodies inviting their comments.

Further work in the review is being directed particularly to issues of race and culture, the needs of learning disabled and homeless people, and the role of, and support for, families. These will be reflected in the steering committee's final report.

The Government will be considering the recommendations arising from this review as a whole in the light of the final report and the responses to consultation on the present and earlier proposals. We have already announced increased capital funding for medium secure psychiatric provision of £18 million in the current year, against £3 million in 1991-92.

My right hon. and learned and hon. Friends and I remain committed to close co-operation between our Departments in this field. We are again most grateful to Dr. Reed and his colleagues for the work they have done.

Census Data

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to ensure that the release of detailed data for the 1991 census occurs as speedily as possible.

Mr. Sackville: In my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 8 May at col 9, I stated that release of the first computer-processed census results was under way, in the form of publication of the first county monitor. County monitors contain summary statistics for all local authority districts on all the census topics which were fully processed and will be published county by county, as the data processing is completed.

In a reply to the then Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on 5 March at columns 272-73, my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State described a major problem which had arisen in processing the answers to the question on the 1991 census form on the term-time address of students. He explained that this had caused some delay to the publication of census results, and gave an outline provisional timetable for publication of the first tranche of results.

Every effort is being made to publish all county monitors by the end of September 1992, and to produce and publish the rest of the first tranche of census outputs to the timetable given in issue 19 of the "Census Newsletter", a copy of which is available in the Library. Further details of the census output timetable will be published in future editions of the "Census Newsletter" as soon as they are sufficiently firm.

Priority is being given to providing those census figures, including statistics required for re-basing the Registrar General's annual mid-year estimates, needed for use in the calculations of 1993-94 resource allocations to local and health authorities.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy guidelines are currently in place within her Department and the purchasing organisations for which she has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Sackville: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payments is stipulated in our standard terms and conditions which form part of all our contracts or purchase orders. These state that unless otherwise agreed in writing by the purchaser, the supplier shall render a separate invoice in respect of each consignment delivered under the order. Payment shall be due 30 days after receipt of the goods or the correct invoice therefore, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their subcontractors, all new Government contracts contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its subcontractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment shall be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what distribution has taken place within her Department and the purchasing organisations for which she has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Sackville: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exists and are enhanced by the Department's own internal purchasing and supply manual.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms' issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contribution her Department has made to Her Majesty's Government's proposals to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Brazil in June.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has contributed to aspects of the conference which have implications for health, in particular, the environmentally sound management of toxic chemicals was selected by the preparatory committee as one of the areas for which programmes of action should be agreed.

In December last year the Chief Medical Officer chaired a meeting of experts from over 70 countries to discuss proposals for an intergovernmental mechanism for chemical risk assessment and management. A report has been put forward for consideration by the conference.

Revenue Allocations

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are her proposals for monitoring the formula adjustments for revenue allocations to district health authorities made by regional health authorities in order to ensure consistency and stability in financial support.

Mr. Sackville: The NHS management executive is in regular contact with each of the regional health authorities (RHAs) about their formulae for making revenue allocations to district health authorities. The aim is to provide RHAs with advice and assistance in the development of their formulae and to ensure that the formulae meet common technical standards set out in FDL(91)102, issued in August 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library.

London Constituencies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the total number of electors registered in each parliamentary constituency in Greater London (a) on the current electoral register and (b) on the registers in force for each of the years from 1978-79 to 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The number of electors on registers between 1983 and 1992 are shown in the tables. There was a general reorganisation of parliamentary constituencies in 1983, and comparable figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Parliamentary electors registered in each constituency in Greater London, 1983-1987

The figures in this table are those supplied by Electoral Registration Officers at the times when the registers come in to use each year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the estimated adult population in each parliamentary constituency in Greater London for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Population estimates are available for London boroughs but not for parliamentary constituencies. Mid-year estimates of persons aged 18 and over in each borough between 1979 and 1990 are shown in the table.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give separate figures for the spending by her Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is her latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Information for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 is not available in the form requested.

The Department's budget for communications and publicity includes provision for nurse recruitment, blood donor recruitment and drug misuse campaigns.

Expenditure is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89
Television	1·662
Radio	0·205
Newspaper	1·196
Other Material	7·736
1989-90

Other Material	16·845
1991-92
Television	4·489
Radio	0·015
Newspaper	3·106
Other Material	16·863

The budget for communications and publicity for 1992-93 is £26·2 million.

South Manchester Hospitals

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has on plans or proposals for reorganising south Manchester's hospitals; what is the earliest date on which she expects any reorganisation could proceed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Responsibility for planning hospital services in South Manchester is a matter for the North Western regional health authority and South Manchester health authority.

It is the long term objective of South Manchester health authority to concentrate acute hospital services in South Manchester on a single site. This proposal is subject to detailed consultation and to consideration by the regional health authority.

Interim proposals to transfer maternity services from Withington hospital to Wythenshaw hospital are presently the subject of further discussions between North Western regional health authority and South Manchester health authority.

Asthma

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children under five years, five to 10 years, and 10 years plus are asthma sufferers by health district for Greater London according to the latest available statistics; and what is the number for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not held centrally.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were born in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and how many and what percentage of those children were born to parents who were married at the time of their birth.

Mr. Sackville: The numbers of live births in the United Kingdom in 1987 to 1991 were as follows:

	Total births	Births within marriage	Percentage of births within marriage
1987	775,617	596,085	77·1
1988	787,556	589,516	74·9
1989	777,276	570,586	73·4

Cot Deaths

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by socio-economic class the number of deaths in England and Wales registered as (a) cot death and (b) sudden infant death syndrome in 1990.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 20 May 1992]: The information requested is given in the table.

Numbers of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) deaths and of Cot deaths by father's social class, England, Wales and Elsewhere[1], 1990

Father's social class	1990 Number of SIDS	1990 Number of Cot Deaths

Home Care Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has issued any advice to local authorities regarding the grading of female home care workers following the recent ruling of the industrial tribunal in East Sussex.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 22 May 1992]: No. The grading of staff is a matter for local authorities to determine in their capacity as employers.

Dentists

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if she will make a statement on the remuneration of NHS dentists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to the reply 12 May 1992 col. 85]: At a meeting today with representatives of the General Dental Services Committee (GDSC) I put forward fair and reasonable proposals on dentists' remuneration.

For the present year 1992-93 the intention of the Doctors and Dentists Remuneration Review Body (DDRB) was that, on average, a dentist's net earnings should be £35,815. This represented an 8·5 per cent. increase in dentists' net remuneration. The Government accepted this recommendation for a greater increase than was awarded to either doctors or nurses.

The evidence suggests that, if left unchanged, the July 1991 fee scale would provide in 1992-93 very substantially more than the DDRB recommended.

Calculations presented to the GDSC today show that, to bring the increase in dentists' income back to the level recommended by the DDRB, a fee reduction of about 23 per cent. would be needed now. The longer action is delayed, the more this figure rises.

I have weighed all the available evidence carefully. This includes the views put to me by dentists and their representatives, the results of the joint inquiry which the Health Departments and the GDSC began in February, and the emerging data on payments in the last financial quarter of 1991-92 to dentists.

Even allowing for some significant margin for error the evidence suggests that actual income will be much higher than intended income unless action is taken now.

I therefore propose a 7 per cent. lowering of the fee scale with effect from 8 July.

I also propose to reduce to £200 the ceiling at which courses of treatment require prior approval from the Dental Practice Board. It is reasonable in the present circumstances for dentists to have to seek prior approval from the Dental Practice Board of their plans for more expensive treatments. This will apply to some 3 per cent. of courses of treatment carried out.

These proposals represent the best way forward for patients, for dentists and taxpayers. They underline our full commitment to the NHS dental service. The chief executive of the NHS is writing to all regional general managers and family health services authority managers today to stress to them the need to maintain the availability of NHS general dental services, if necessary, by employing salaried dentists.

For the future, the Government remain committed to a fundamental review of dental remuneration. I look to that review to develop a system which more effectively and fairly remunerates all dentists for the important work they do.

Smoking

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, Official Report, column 84, (1) when she expects to have information or indications on the proportions of smokers in the United Kingdom and in each other European Community country later then the 1989 figures in the British Medical Journal;

(2) what information she receives from the European Commission on the trends in smoking in each or any parts of the European Community.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply 21 May 1992 col. 228]: the figure given for smoking prevalance in the United Kingdom for 1990 should have been 30 per cent. rather than 39 per cent.

EMPLOYMENT

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total sum paid out in fees by her Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is her estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure on management consultancy in the Employment Department group in each year from 1984-85 to 1990-91 was as follows:

	£ thousands
1984-85	365
1985-86	365
1986-87	1,032
1987-88	653
1988-89	998
1989-90	1,482
1990-91	1,782
1991-92	[1]5,344

[1] Estimated outturn.

The information for 1992-93 will be reported to Parliament in the usual way. Information for 1979-80 to 1983-84 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons are registered as available for work in the SW9 postal code area of London; and how many are currently registered as unemployed.

Mr. McLoughlin: In April 1992, on the unadjusted basis, the number of claimants unemployed in the SW9 postal code area was 1,027.

This monthly unemployment count relates to claimants of benefits at unemployment benefit offices on the day of the count. Claimants include those people who claim unemployment benefit, income support or national insurance credits and who state that they are available for, and actively seeking, work.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the public opinion surveys carried out by her Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's various research branches do not commission public opinion surveys as such. However, they do carry out research projects on a variety of employment-related issues which involve surveys of individuals. The following list shows those research studies, commissioned or partly funded by the Employment Department group (ED, Employment Service, Health and Safety Executive and the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service), which have involved surveys of individuals commissioned since 1 November 1991.

Youth Training

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 16 and 17 years have applied for youth training; and how many have not been given a youth training place at once in each training and enterprise council area.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what income a 16 or 17-year-old receives on youth training, in any week, waiting for a youth training place; how many people aged 16 or 17 years waiting for a youth training place have been receiving income or income support; and how soon after applying for youth training a 16 or 17-year-old can receive income while waiting for a place to become available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following arrangements apply:

(i) A young person on youth training (YT) in employed status will receive a wage at a level agreed with the employer.

(ii) A non-employed trainee must receive at least £29·50 per week if under 17 years old and £35 per week if 17 or over.

(iii) A young person waiting for YT may either have a place booked and be waiting to take it up, or may be seeking the offer of a place. In either case that young person, if under 18 years of age, may be eligible for a YT bridging allowance of £15 per week from the Employment Service for up to eight weeks in any 12 month period or, if they run the risk of severe hardship, they may be eligible to receive income support through the severe hardship provision.

(iv) Even if they are not eligible for any of the payments in (iii) above, young people waiting for YT may still receive income from a variety of sources. The number of young people waiting for YT who have an income of their own cannot therefore be estimated accurately.

(v) Young people eligible for bridging allowance (except for some special groups) cannot start receiving bridging allowance until they have left a previous job or YT place, made an application, and waited for their first girocheque payment.

(vi) Young persons can secure income support (including severe hardship payments) as soon as they satisfy the eligibility criteria. They may be able to secure assistance through a crisis loan until regular payments commence.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the total work force in her Department are registered as disabled; what steps she is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within her Department; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 3·2 per cent. at June 1991, the latest date for which figures are available. The Department also employs many other people with disabilities who have chosen not to register. It has also implemented the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give separate figures for the spending by her Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is her latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Expenditure on advertising and promotional material by the Department of Employment from 1979-80 to 1985-86 was as follows:

1979-80	70,000
1980-81	320,000
1981-82	400,000
1982-83	360,000
1983-84	500,000
1984-85	320,000
1985-86	1,220,000

Figures for television, radio and newspaper advertising and other promotional material are not available separately. The figures for 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 are as follows:

Year	Television £ million	Press/Radio £ million	Other promotional £ million
1986-87	9·3	3·0	4·1
1987-88	3·3	0·8	2·8
1988-89	2·1	2·3	1·3
1989-90	0·9	0·9	1·2
1990-91	N/A	0·5	2·1
1991-92	8·5	4·1	5·7

The figures from 1979-80 to 1990-91 refer only to Department of Employment expenditure. They do not cover expenditure by the former Training Agency, Training Commission and Manpower Services Commission. Figures for these were provided to the hon. Member in a written reply on 5 November 1991 at col. 68-70. From 1991-92, expenditure by the former agency has been handled centrally within the Department's overall advertising and publicity budget.

The Department's overall advertising and publicity budget for 1992-93 is £8·35 million. Detailed decisions on expenditure by media category have not yet been taken.

High Peak TEC

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of young people offered training places by High Peak training and enterprise council within the last two years (a) finished their training and (b) found full-time jobs.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information required is not available in the form requested. Stockport and High Peak TEC became operational on 20 August 1990 previously the area came partly under Manchester East area office and Derbyshire area office. The latest information is for leavers from the youth training programme in the Stockport and High Peak TEC area during the period August 1990 to July 1991.

Thirty four per cent. of all leavers completed their training and 52 per cent. of all leavers went into full-time work.

Horizon Programme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list all the United Kingdom participants in the European Community Horizon programme and the nature of each project; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A total of 37 projects have been formally approved under the Horizon programme in Great Britain. Information relating to these projects has been extracted from individual applications and is given in the following table. This was correct at 22 May 1992.

A further 45 projects have been given approval in principle. These will receive formal approval once outstanding queries on financial and transnational aspects are resolved.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of receipts in the United Kingdom during the current year from the Horizon programme; what proportion this represents of total European Community expenditure on the programme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Horizon programme in Great Britain has received an allocation of 14·9 mecu—£10·38 million—for the calendar years 1991-93. This represents 10·8 per cent. of the 162 mecu allocated to member states to date under Horizon by the European Commission.

Training

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will state, on the same basis as "Training Statistics 1991" HMSO publication S410.4, (a) the total expenditure on training, (b) Government expenditure on training and (c) employers' expenditure on training, for each year since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Comparable figures for years other than 1986-87, as published in "Training Statistics 1991", are not available.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those completing employment training and youth training schemes in Walthamstow in 1990 and 1991 went on to full-time employment; and what proportion of the trainees on the schemes this represented.

Mr. McLoughlin: Walthamstow is now covered by London East TEC which became operational on 1 April 1991, previously Walthamstow was covered by East London area office. Information is available only for the larger areas as shown in the following table.

Success rates for Employment Training and Youth Training leavers from East London

Notes: n/a = numbers too small to give accurate proportions.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the size of the budget, and the number of training places funded in 1991-92 and projected for 1992-93 for each training and enterprise council.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my predecessor gave to the then hon. Member for Langbaurgh on 3 February 1992 at columns 32-33.

The budget allocations for training and enterprise councils (TECs) for 1992-93 are still subject to negotiation in some of the Department's training, enterprise and education directorate regions and therefore not yet available. Information regarding the number of training places funded is not available as TECs have contracted with local training providers on a training week basis.

Information regarding the number of training weeks contracted is commercial in confidence and a matter for the TEC to answer.

"Investor in People" Scheme

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list by name and location the organisations which (a) have been awarded the "Investor in People" recognition and (b) are in the process of working towards the standard required for the award.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available information on organisations in Great Britain which have been publicly recognised as "Investors in People" is as follows:

The latest available numerical information from the training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and local enterprise companies in Scotland is that at 31 March 1992, 1,010 organisations were formally committed to work towards recognition.

Employment Prospects (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will consider the Isle of Wight for a pilot study into employment prospects for women, in the light of the increase revealed in the 1991 census returns.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans for a special study covering the Isle of Wight. The increases between 1981 and 1991 in the percentages of women on the Isle of Wight working as full-time employees, part-time employees and as self-employed, and the small decline in the percentage who are unemployed, show that, as in the United Kingdom as a whole, employment opportunities for women have increased.

City Working Hours

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether firms in the City of London, such as stockbrokers and merchant bankers, whose staff work more than a 48-hour basic week would need to seek derogation under the terms of the draft directive on working hours as it currently stands.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In its current form the draft directive on working time would apply to all employees except for those in transport and sea fishing. Derogations would be permitted in certain circumstances, including cases where the duration of working time can be determined by the employees themselves, such as managing executives or other people with autonomous decision taking powers. These maybe of relevance to the financial services sector. Notwithstanding possible derogations, the Government see no justification for general and compulsory limits on the working week and are continuing, through constructive discussions with our Community partners, to seek to protect employers and employees in the United Kingdom against arbitrary and unnecessary restrictions.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she will introduce legislation to ban discrimination against employees on grounds of age or the setting of arbitrary age limits.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. We do not believe that legislation is the way to tackle this issue.

Older Workers

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she expects to complete the setting up of the special advisory group on older workers; what are its terms of reference; and when it will start and complete its work.

Mr. McLoughlin: We have received an encouraging number of expressions of interest about the advisory group on older workers, and will soon be in a position to issue invitations for membership. The group will assist in encouraging, identifying and disseminating good employer practice with regard to older workers. It will start work later this year, and progress will be reviewed after three years.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits (Late Payment)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to publish the rules governing the schemes for compensating individuals for late payment of benefits.

Mr. Burt: The arrangements for making special payments to compensate individuals for late payment of benefit are made in accordance with the general principles concerning ex-gratia payments in "Government Accounting", The Treasury's published guide to accounting and financial procedures in Government. Each case is decided within these general principles, taking into account the particular facts and circumstances, which vary widely from case to case.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals received compensation payments; and how much was paid, for each benefit in each year since the scheme for compensating individuals for late payment began.

Mr. Burt: Payments made to customers to compensate them for late payment of benefit in individual cases are as follows:

Family Credit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions he made about (i) the case load take-up rate and (ii) the expenditure take-up rate of family credit when calculating the extra cost of £49 million of the change in qualifying hours threshold for income support/family credit.

Mr. Burt: No explicit assumption on take-up rates were required, or employed, in calculating the cost of the hours rule change.

The effects of changes in entitlement are calculated by adjusting modelled entitlement to reflect the ratio of receipt to modelled entitlement under existing policies. This allows for a number of factors that affect policy cost estimates, including incomplete take-up of benefit. These calculations are then further adjusted by adding estimates of behavioural changes likely to be induced by the policy change.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of people in Greater London entitled to claim family credit actually receive the benefit.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. Estimates of the total number of families eligible for family credit can be obtained only for Great Britain as a whole, and only retrospectively, from Family Expenditure Survey data.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many weeks elapsed between application and receipt of family credit for (a) employed people and (b) self-employed people in each of the years for which family credit has been available; and what is the current figure;

(2) if he will list the total number of appeals lodged by (a) employed and (b) self-employed people against decisions not to grant family credit to applicants in each year since its inception; and if he will show the number of successful appeals in each year.

Mr. Burt: The administration of family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the gross and net social fund budget in each year since 1988-89 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms in 1992-93 prices, broken down into (i) budgeting loans, (ii) crisis loans and (iii) community care grants.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table. Gross expenditure has risen in real terms since 1988-89. Direct comparisons between net expenditure in 1988-89 and subsequent years would ignore the additional expenditure made possible by the recycling of money received from loan repayments.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Survey and Purpose

1. Pilot work for the local customer survey

To test the new questionnaires for the local customer survey 1992. This is a survey of the views of benefit offices' customers about the services provided. Conducted in February 1992.

2. Disability benefits campaign evaluation

Two waves of campaign evaluation conducted in January and April 1992.

3. Child Support Agency

Target market study among the Asian sector of the population. Currently being conducted.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Miss Widdecombe: Functions commonly associated with public relations are carried out by information officers as part of their duties in the Department's information division.

For information for 1979-80 to 1989-90, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 22 May 1991 at col. 535.

Estimated total expenditure in 1991-92 is as follows:

Publicity, which includes television advertising and leaflets: £11·407 million.

Staff and running costs: total expenditure figures are not yet available.

1992-93 budgets for the headquarters information division and the Benefits Agency information service branch in the Department of Social Security are as follows:

	DSS HQ £ million	BA £ million
Publicity	10·088	8·261
Staff running costs	·813	1·25
	·345

Social Security Offices

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the number and organisation of social security offices.

Mr. Burt: The number and organisation of social security offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not keep separate records of expenditure on management consultancy. Taking consultancy as a whole, the figures are in the table.

	£ million
1983-84	3·624
1984-85	7·726
1985-86	13·647
1986-87	17·220
1987-88	27·564
1988-89	47·730
1989-90	40·907
1990-91	78·094
1991-92	76·987
1992-93	[1]67·047

[1] Estimated.

Notes:

1. By far the majority of expenditure relates to information technology consultancy services in respect of the operational strategy.
2. The figures prior to 1989-90 relate to the combined Department of Health and Social Security.
3. Information prior to 1983-84 is not available.

Disabled employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the total work force in his Department are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: As at 1 June 1991, 1·87 per cent. of the staff employed by the Department of Social Security, including its agencies, were registered as disabled. This figure excludes staff with disabilities who choose not to register and more than 50 registered disabled people employed under the sheltered placement scheme. The Department, including its agencies, is committed to implementing the civil service code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities and increasing the number of employees with disabilities.

Income support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many recipients of income support aged between 18 to 24 years are living away from home and are entitled to the personal allowance for (a) persons aged 18 to 24 years, and (b) persons aged 25 years and over;

(2) what would be the cost of raising the income support personal allowance for persons aged 18 to 24 years who are living away from home to the level of the personal allowance for persons aged 25 and over;

(3) how many recipients of income support aged 18 to 24 years are entitled to the personal allowance rate which is generally appropriate to persons aged 25 years and over.

Mr. Burt: The latest available figures show that in May 1990 there were 218,000 single people aged 18 to 24 receiving income support at the rate appropriate to those aged 25 or over. This information is derived from the Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry, May 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

There is no comparable statistic on the number of 18 to 24-year-old income support claimants who might be "living away from home", which has no standard definition. However, modelling based on data from the 1987-88-89 Family Expenditure Survey offers an estimate that in 1992-93 there are (a) 180,000 receiving the 18 to 24 personal allowance, and (b) 220,000 receiving the personal allowance for those aged 25 or over. This assumes that "living away from home" means people classified by the Family Expenditure Survey as the head of the household, plus all those living in the household of a person who is a non-relative.

From this an estimated total cost of raising the income support rate for those aged 18 to 24 who are living away from home to the same level as those aged 25 or over is around £110 million in a full year, including housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding difficulties experienced by claimants for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have received some correspondence about the length and complexity of the claim pack and about the length of time taken to process claims. Some teething problems are not unexpected with such a major change to the administration of disability benefits and we are closely monitoring the operation of the new system. Nevertheless, the introduction of the new claims process for disability living allowance has been widely welcomed by both disabled people and their organisations as better meeting the needs of disabled people and putting greater reliance on what they have to say about their disability.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the trend in the speed of service at the attendance allowance unit since the introduction of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Hardship Payments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines exist for deciding entitlement to severe hardship payments for 16 and 17-year-olds; and if he will publish those guidelines.

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Sickness and Invalidity Benefits

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for (a) sickness benefit and (b) invalidity benefit were refused in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, by reason of insufficient national insurance contributions; and how many of these refusals related to a period of study which was not credited with national insurance contributions under regulations 7 and 8 of the Social Security (Credits) Regulations.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Invalidity benefit cannot be paid unless the contribution conditions for sickness benefit have been satisfied or deemed to have been satisfied, and there has been 28 weeks of incapacity for work.

In 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, 253,400[1] claims[2] to sickness benefit were unsuccessful because the national insurance contribution conditions were not satisfied. It is not known how many of these refusals might have involved claimants who had not received credits for a period of study.

Notes:

1. Information from a 1 per cent. sample of claimants.
2. A 'claim' means a claim submitted at the beginning of a spell of incapacity for work. If a person has several separate spells of incapacity for work during the year, each spell is counted as a claim.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the average clearance times for reviews of attendance allowance (a) for requests made in March 1991, (b) for requests made in November 1991 and (c) for requests made in March 1992;

(2) what is the average length of time taken for attendance allowance initial claims to be processed by the attendance allowance unit at Norcross (a) for claims made in January 1991, (b) for claims made in November 1991, (c) for claims made in February 1992 and (d) for claims made in April 1992.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Injury and Occupational Disease (Compensation)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the regulations so that claimants for compensation through injury or occupational disease do not have to pay back state benefits after their claim has been settled when the level of compensation is over £2,500.

Miss Widdecombe: The principle that accident victims should not be compensated twice has been a feature of the social security scheme since 1948. The compensation recovery scheme has merely replaced the old and inconsistent arrangements, by which negligent employers and other compensators gained at the expense of the taxpayer. The scheme is working well and there are no plans for major change.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Miss Widdecombe: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their subcontractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the sub-contractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Miss Widdecombe: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by HM Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of the prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Spending Power

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average increase in net weekly spending power of a man with two children of seven and 11 years and a non-working wife for each extra pound he earns if he increases his pay from (a) £100 to £110, (b) £110 to £120, (c) £120 to £130, (d) £130 to £140 and (e) £140 to £150 assuming he pays average rent and community charge.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the tables. The assumptions used are those in the published tax benefit model tables, a copy of which is available in the Library. Each family is assumed to pay the estimated 1991-92 average local authority rent of £26·03. Community charge is included at an illustrative level of £4·70 per week.

It should be noted that the results in the tables cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use illustrative rents and do not, therefore, reflect the full range of housing costs which people may face.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of the European Community Helios programme for people with disabilities.

Mr. Scott: The Council of Ministers is currently considering the European Commission's proposals for the Helios II programme and the European Parliament's opinion is awaited. The Government supported all aspects of the Helios I programme from 1988 to 1991 and is expecting to receive shortly the final report of an independent evaluation carried out by a team of researchers from Southampton university.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list all the United Kingdom participants in the European Community TIDE programme and the nature of each project; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his estimate of receipts in the United Kingdom during the current year from the TIDE programme; what proportion this represents of total European Community expenditure on the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: TIDE (technology initiative for disabled and elderly people) is a research and development pilot action managed by the Commission of European Communities. The Commission has published synopses of the pilot action projects listing all the participants a copy of which will be placed in the Library. The funding allocated to each project has not been disclosed by the Commission.

Local Offices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff, full-time equivalent, were employed in each of the three local offices in the Newham district benefits agency for each quarter in 1991 in (a) income support, (b) contributions, (c) direct payments, (d) social fund, (e) fraud, (f) child support and (g) total; and what is the current position for the latest date for which he has figures.

Mr. Burt: The staffing of Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Maintenance Payments

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take action to prevent official pressure being put on women to name fathers for maintenance purposes.

Mr. Burt: There is currently no requirement for a mother to name the father of her child when claiming social security benefits, though more than three-quarters of never-married mothers do so voluntarily. From April 1993, when the Child Support Agency is established, there will be a legal requirement for parents in receipt of prescribed benefits to co-operate in obtaining maintenance for their children. Taxpayers, many of whom have families of their own, should not have to shoulder the responsibility of providing for children where the natural parents are able to do so. However, the matter will be dealt with sympathetically by trained officers and the requirement will be waived where there are reasonable grounds for believing that compliance would risk causing harm to undue distress to the mother or any child living with her.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: For information from 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1990-91, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 12 November 1991 at col. 478.

For 1991-92 the information is as follows:

Department of Social Security and its agencies (other than Benefits Agency)

	£ millions
Expenditure in 1991-92
for television advertising was	4·396
for radio advertising was	0·626
for newspaper advertising was	0·772
for other information material was	4·552

Provision for the 1992-93 Social Security budget is £13·68 million. Decisions on media have not been made.

The Benefits Agency

For expenditure for 1991-92

for television, radio and press advertising was NIL;

for other materials (leaflets, posters, etc) was £6·55 million.

Provision for the 1992-93 Benefits Agency budget is £8·261 million.

Claimant Eligibility

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, columns 288-89, for which benefits his Department has an estimate of the numbers eligible to claim it.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is contained in the estimates of take-up of income-related benefits for 1987; these relate to housing benefit, family income supplement and supplementary benefit, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively and overall in his Department are members of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 12 May 1992]: The Department, including its executive agencies, asks staff to complete questionnaires on their ethnic origin on a voluntary basis. As at 15 April 1992 3,237 of the 64,564 staff who responded to the questionnaire were from ethnic minorities. The breakdown of respondents, for the Department as a whole, and by grades 1-7 is in the table.

5	3	3.4
6	18	10
7	7	1.5
Others	3,208	5
Total for Department	3,237	5

[1]Includes professional equivalents.

Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total difference (in current prices) between (a) the cumulative cost of the single pension paid to an individual since April 1979 to date, and (b) the cumulative cost of the single pension paid had the link between the rise in earnings and the rise in the pension been sustained: and what are the comparable figures for the married couples pensions.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 18 May 1992, columns 22-28]: The following information was incorrect:

"The cumulative difference in cost had pensions been uprated by the higher of earnings or prices from April 1980 to date would be £7,690 million."

The corrected version is:

"The cumulative difference in cost had pensions been uprated by the higher of earnings or prices from April 1980 to date would be £43,136 million."

In the original reply the cost for one year (1992-93) was given instead of the cumulative cost as requested.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Departmental Pay Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many full-time and part-time employees in his Department earn less than £3·40 an hour.

Mr. Eggar: At 30 April 1992 there were 794 full-time and 33 part-time employees in the Department of Trade and Industry earning less than £3·40 an hour.

British Coal

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list measures for job retraining programmes and other assistance his Department is planning for mineworkers who will be made redundant following privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: A range of programmes and measures is already available to assist people and communities affected by redundancies in the coal industry. The Government will continue to support and encourage initiatives which bring real benefits to coal-mining areas. Specifically, the Government have clearly stated their commitment to increasing the support for the job creation, resettlement and retraining activities of British Coal Enterprise. The European Community RECHAR initiative, which is aimed at providing the economic regeneration of coal-mining areas, will also bring benefits of at least £124 million to such areas.

Bank Fees (Report)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the copy of the report by Rochester Research which has been sent to him concerning the levels of fees to small businesses charged by Lloyds and Midland banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have not received a copy of this report.

Bank Mergers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answers of 15 May 1992 to the hon. Members for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) and for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), Official Report, column 232, when he expects to receive advice from the Director General of Fair Trading on the possible offer from Lloyds bank for Midland bank.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading submitted his advice on the proposed acquisition by Lloyds Bank plc of Midland Bank plc to the President of the Board of Trade on 20 May. The President announced his decision to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, in accordance with the director general's advice, on 22 May.

Footwear (Chinese Imports)

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take action to restrict imports of footwear from China into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: My Department is currently considering a proposal from the European Commission to introduce a Community wide quantitative restriction for the rest of this year on imports of certain types of footwear from China. Such a measure, if agreed, would replace the differing national quotas which most member states—including the UK— presently apply to direct imports from there.

Consultants Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the fees paid to management consultants before 1984-85 was not kept in a form in which it could be separately identifiable. The information for subsequent years is as follows, although it has not always been possible to disaggregate expenditure on management consultancy from other forms of consultancy such as in information technology. The figures do not include fees paid by DTI agencies operating on a net running costs regime or as trading funds. The apparent reduction between 1986-87 and 1991-92 is a result of the shift of expenditure towards programme-related consultancies for which separate records are not kept. The figure for 1992-93, which takes into account the merger with the old Department of Energy, represents the allocation to management consultancy as a result of the Department's annual activity and resource management review.

1984-85	6,104
1985-86	6,417
1986-87	4,650
1987-88	3,050
1988-89	2,516
1989-90	3,168
1990-91	2,771
1991-92	1,884
1992-93	2,504

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total sum paid out in fees by the Department of Energy to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested for the years up to 1980-81 is no longer available and for 1981-82 to 1983-84 is available only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure by the Department of Energy on management consultancies for 1984-85 onwards is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure
1984-85	53,328
1985-86	31,209
1986-87	30,101
1987-88	35,451
1988-89	27,496
1989-90	6,317
1990-91	14,683
1991-92	43,481

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93;

(2) if he will give the total expenditure by Department of Energy on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure by the two Departments on press and public relations in 1991-92 was as follows:

Department of Trade and Industry, £2,719.000.
Department of Energy, £705,000.

DTI expenditure in 1992-93, covering trade, industry and energy issues, is expected to be of the order of £3,160,000. The figures include regional press officer and other support services.

For the equivalent expenditure in earlier years I refer the hon. Member to previous answers:

Department of Trade and Industry
Official Report 13 March 1990, column 172; 30 April 1991, column 127; and 5 November 1991, column 62.
Department of Energy
Official Report 30 April 1991, column 107.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by the Department of Energy between 1 November 1991 and its abolition.

Mr. Eggar: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry has not carried out any public opinion surveys in this period.

Weights and Measures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of (a) public houses and (b) garages were inspected by weights and measures inspectors by local authority areas in 1981, 1988, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Leigh: Although the President receives annual reports from each local weights and measures authority, these reports do not contain specific information relating to public houses and garages.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to provide, under the coal industry privatisation, for the continuation of supply of free or subsidised fuel to miners and miners' widows and dependants on the same terms as at present; and what consideration has been given to paying compensation in its place, either (a) as a lump sum or (b) as periodical payments.

Mr. Eggar: The Government will ensure that existing concessionary fuel entitlements from British Coal will be safeguarded following privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if former miners and miners' widows and dependants will be given written and full details of the impact of privatisation on their pension arrangements and their fuel allowance before any shares are sold.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 20 May, Official Report, column 156.

No decisions have been taken on the form or timing of privatisation.

Fraud (Tax Havens)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to prevent frauds, criminal activities and other losses being perpetrated in the United Kingdom by trusts, companies and individuals controlled from Liechtenstein and other tax havens.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department is firmly committed to measures to prevent fraudulent activities. My Department works closely with regulatory authorities in the United Kingdom and overseas to protect investors against fraudulent activity by companies and individuals. I welcome the growing number of countries which, like the United Kingdom, now have powers to carry out investigations for foreign authorities.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the minutes of the relevant meetings and other relevant correspondence of those persons in his Department who were involved in the granting of licences or approvals to deal in securities to any companies associated with the late Mr. Maxwell.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list in respect of (a) Maxwell and East European Partners plc, formerly Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc, (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (c) any other company associated with the late Mr. Maxwell to which his Department granted licences or approvals to deal in securities, the names of each director and any notified prospective director of each company at the date of the application, the date of approval, and the date the company ceased to hold the licence or approval;

(2) if he will list in respect of (a) Maxwell and East European Partners plc, formerly Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc, (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (c) any other company associated with the late Mr. Maxwell to which his Department granted licences or approvals to deal in securities, (i) details of any securities trading which any of the companies notified the Department it has carried out prior to approval; and (ii) the date on which each company applied for, was granted and ceased to hold such licences or approvals.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department granted a licence under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 to London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc, LBI. LBI applied for a licence on 28 February 1988. A licence was granted on 25 April 1988. It came into effect on 26 April 1988 and lapsed on 29 April 1988 when the relevant parts of the Financial Services Act came into force. The directors were notified as Mr Andrew Smith, Mr Kevin Maxwell and Mr Larry Trachtenberg.

LBI did not notify the Department of any securities trading carried out before the licence was granted.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment of the previous references to Mr Maxwell in reports by inspectors acting on behalf of his Department was made when his Department granted licences to deal in securities to (a) Maxwell and East European Partners plc, (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (c) any other company associated with the late Mr Maxwell which was authorised to deal in securities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department carried out the usual checks in connection with the application for a licence from London & Bishopsgate International Management plc. Mr. Robert Maxwell was not a director of LBI when the licence was granted.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in respect of (a) Maxwell and East European Partners, formerly Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc, (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (c) any other company associated with the late Mr. Maxwell to which his Department granted licences or approvals to deal in securities the names of the shareholders and notified prospective shareholders at the date of the application, the date of approval and the date the company ceased to hold the licence for approval.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Applications for licences under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 did not require the disclosure of the names of shareholders.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will initiate an enquiry into the extent of losses to the United Kingdom economy and private individuals over the last 20 years as a result of frauds and other criminal or loss inducing activities perpetrated by trusts, companies or individuals controlled from Liechtenstein or other tax havens.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of the files regarding the application, authorisation and approval of (a) Maxwell and East European Partners (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (c) any other company associated with the late Mr. Maxwell which obtained licences or approvals to deal in securities from his Department.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 1·1 per cent. of the Department's workforce is registered as disabled. The Department also employs a number of people who are known to be disabled but have chosen not to register.

The Department fully accepts the responsibilities laid down by the civil service code of practice on the employment of disabled people and has taken steps to try to increase the number of disabled recruits.

Plutonium (Transport)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received raising concerns over the emergency plans existing for the transport of plutonium from Sellafield to Japan via the Panama canal and Pacific ocean.

Mr. Eggar: I know of no proposals for such a transport operation.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication, "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers."

Mr. Leigh: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by HM Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of the prompt payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firms issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Electricity

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study his Department has made into the impact on electricity users of changes to voltage and systems to bring the United Kingdom into line with the German system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are aware of a proposal by CENELEC, the European Standards Committee for electricity, to move to a standardised nominal voltage of 230 volts throughout the European Community and EFTA countries. The Government will be consulting the electricity industry, equipment manufacturers and consumer organisations about the implications of the proposal.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received following the public inquiry into Kelt UK Ltd's plans for a gas-fired electricity generating station at West Knapton, north Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received three such representations.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial contribution Her Majesty's Government makes towards the operation of the International Atomic Energy Agency; and what plans his Department has to increase that contribution.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom's contribution to the International Atomic Energy Agency for 1992 is £6·5 million. The contribution for 1993 will depend on the decision to be taken this year by the agency's board of governors as well as by any revision of the United Nations scale for assessing contributions.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will give separate figures for the spending by the Department of Energy on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92;

(2) if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure by the two Departments in 1991-92 was as follows (£000):

	Department of Trade and Industry[1]	Department of Energy
Television advertising	2	Nil
Radio advertising	4	Nil
Newspaper advertising	345	615
Other promotional material	[2]3,502	[3]1,079

[1]Central publicity budget.
[2]Publications, audio-visual materials and posters.
[3]Publications only.

For the equivalent expenditure in earlier years I refer the hon. Member to previous answers:

Department of Trade and Industry
Official Report 5 November 1991, columns 63-64; 29 April 1991, column 56; and 13 March 1990; column 173
Department of Energy
Official Report 5 November 1991, column 67; and 25 April 1991, column 500.

Media allocations for 1992-93 will be made according to need during the year.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the target of Her Majesty's Government for the proportion of energy generated from renewable sources of energy in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland by (i) the year 2000 and (ii) 2010;

(2) what steps his Department is taking to achieve the European Community recommendation that each member state generates 5 to 6 per cent. of its energy from renewable sources of energy by the year 2000.

Mr. Eggar: Targets for the exploitation of renewable energy are under consideration as part of the review of the Government's renewable energy programme, which will be reported in due course.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set a target for electricity from renewable sources at 10 per cent. of total supply by the year 2000.

Mr. Eggar: Targets for the exploitation of renewable energy are under consideration as part of the review of the Government's renewable energy programme, which will be reported in due course.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received a copy of the Energy Committee's Fourth Report, Session 1991-92, on "Renewable Energy Technologies and Prospects"; and what response he plans to make.

Mr. Eggar: The Energy Select Committee's fourth report was received shortly after publication and the response is currently under consideration.

Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the firms or individuals invited to tender for each of the consultant appointments given in his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 231-32; and which ones submitted tenders.

Mr. Eggar: Several organisations were invited to tender and a number submitted tenders. Those organisations submitting tenders did so in confidence.

Red Mercury Compounds

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) in concert with his European Community counterparts to block the trade in red mercury compounds used in the manufacture of nuclear warheads.

Mr. Needham: I am advised that the substance known as red mercury has long been incorrectly associated with capabilities in nuclear weapons development. Mercury oxide and mercury sulphide, whether or not in the form which gives them their red colour, are not subject to export control from the UK.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Barry field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those inhabited offshore islands within the United Kingdom taxation regime that do not have assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are a number of inhabited offshore islands that are subject to the United Kingdom tax regime but which do not have assisted area status, including the Isle of Wight in England and the Orkney and Shetland islands, Islay, Jura, Colonsay and Mull in Scotland.

Photocopying Costs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce regulations to control the amounts loaned by finance and leasing companies in respect of photocopying machines used in cost per copy photocopy agreements.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. I welcome the recent initiatives by the Finance and Leasing Association and the Director General of Fair Trading in this area. Leasing documentation should be clear and specific, enabling prospective lesses to decide whether a cost per copy facility is more appropriate.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will investigate the profits made from cost per copy photocopying agreements by Anglio Leasing, its subsidiary RML leasing, and Palace Leasing.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no powers to make such an investigation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to extend his recent inquiry into malpractice in the photocopying industry to cover business practices of leasing companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading has a general statutory duty to make himself aware of activities which may adversely affect the interests of consumers in the United Kingdom. If the hon. Member has evidence of such activities it should be brought to the attention of the director general so that he may consider what action, if any, may be appropriate under the legislation for which he is responsible.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the value to leasing companies of cost per copy photocopying agreements.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. Such agreements are likely to vary too widely in their size and terms for such an estimate to be feasible.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will cancel all present and planned building of nuclear power stations, close down existing Magnox reactors and phase out advance gas-cooled reactors.

Mr. Eggar: No. The Government will undertake a full-scale review of the future prospects for nuclear power in the UK in 1994. Until then, the UK's existing stations will be operated to the highest standards of safety and as efficiently as possible. Nuclear Electric plc will complete the construction of Sizewell B.

Government Subsidies

Mr. John Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the annual Government subsidies to the British nuclear and coal industries for each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of financial support given to the coal industry by Government since 1982-83 is as follows—outturn prices:

	£ million
1982-83	521
1983-84	1,146
1984-85	2,414
1985-86	563
1986-87	882
1987-88	677
1988-89	297
1989-90	7,243
1990-91	141
1991-92	448

No Government subsidies have been paid to Nuclear Electric plc or BNFL. Both these companies are recipients of the fossil fuel levy paid by electricity suppliers. The Government have, however, been the customer for research and development and other programmes undertaken by the Atomic Energy Authority and have funded those programmes and the consequences of those programmes.

Ministerial responsibility for Scottish Nuclear Limited rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Registrar of Companies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had and what representations he has received concerning the actions of the registrar of Companies house in terminating his consultation arrangements with the Companies House Users Group; and if he will make a statement on the future quality of public access to commercial data statutorily provided to and via Companies house.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To the best of my knowledge the President has had no consultations and received no representations about Companies House User Group. As an executive agency, the day-to-day management of Companies House is the responsibility of the chief executive and any arrangements made with users are a matter for him. He has been asked to write to the hon. Member. As to the future quality of public access to commercial data the chief executive has recently introduced a total quality programme with the aim of achieving a higher standard of quality in all aspects of its work.

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about funding arrangements for tidal energy schemes and their implications for the construction of a barrage on the River Mersey.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1979-80 the Government have spent £10·5 million on work on tidal power. The objective of the Government's programme on tidal power is to reduce the technical, economic, regional and environmental uncertainties associated with tidal barrages through a number of site and generic studies.

The Government have already contributed £2·5 million towards feasibility studies completed at a cost of £5 million on the River Mersey tidal barrage project. The Government are funding a further £1·2 million of the £1·5 million cost of the current stage of studies. A decision on any further work on the Mersey barrage will be considered when this current phase of work is completed later this year.

Lloyd's of London

Mr. Michael Spicer: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he will consider holding an official public inquiry into the operation of Lloyd's of London.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Sir David Walker is currently conducting an investigation into allegations of malpractice, including insider trading, at Lloyd's. Sir Jeremy Morse chairs a working group studying governance of the market. There are independent loss reviews inquiring into the circumstances of losses of the worst affected syndicates. Any further inquiry would not help the work now in progress.

Monopoly References

Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the power of the Director General of Fair Trading to make a monopoly reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission without his approval.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There are no plans for such a review. When the Director General of Fair Trading makes a monopoly reference the Secretary of State may, within 14 days of publication of the reference, direct the MMC not to proceed with the reference. To date this power of veto has never been exercised.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the GATT talks to reopen.

Mr. Needham: Talks are continuing on the outstanding issues between the participants in the Uruguay round of GATT negotiations. These include both formal GATT meetings and informal contacts between the parties. Vice-President Andriessen, the Commissioner who leads for the European Community in the talks, had discussions in Washington last week with the United States Secretary of State James Baker. These made useful progress and will, we hope, contribute to bringing the Uruguay round to an early successful conclusion.

Registrar of Companies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those trading organisations that do not have to file reports and accounts with the Registrar of Companies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Companies Acts require that all limited companies, whether trading or not, deliver accounts to the registrar. However, an unlimited company is not subject to this requirement unless it is a subsidiary, or parent of a limited company, or carries on business as the promoter of a trading stamps scheme. These provisions do not apply to other trading organisations.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Registrar of Companies House concerning the present strategic review of Companies House; and if he will place a copy of such review, when completed, in the Library.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The strategic review of Companies House executive agency was initiated with the approval of my predecessor. It is anticipated that the review will be completed in early 1993 and I shall be consulting with the chief executive of Companies House during this period. The strategic plan which will emerge from the review will be submitted to me for approval when completed and I shall consider at the time whether the plan should be placed in the Library.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to halt nuclear reprocessing at Sellafield and Dounreay and cancel THORP at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: No.

RECHAR

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he intends to take to reimburse qualifying local authorities for expenditure incurred during the last financial year on the assumption of receiving RECHAR moneys.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1992]: In accordance with article 15(2) of Council regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88, expenditure may be considered eligible for structural funds assistance under the United Kingdom's RECHAR programmes if incurred after the date on which the programme applications reached the European Commission—26 July 1990. Priorities for the allocation of RECHAR grant money will be considered by the programme monitoring committees.

Personal Protective Equipment

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when will the personal protective equipment directive be enacted; how long the transitional period will be; and what products will be covered.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The draft regulations to transpose the requirements of the personal protective equipment directive into national law will be issued for public consultation soon with a view to their enactment shortly thereafter. The directive contains details of the transitional arrangements but the European Commission is considering possible changes. Until precise details are known, the regulations are being drafted to reflect the current situation under article 5.3 of the directive. The directive contains guidance on the products covered.

Industrial Gloves

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether it is intended that under the personal protective equipment directive industrial gloves can be sold during the transitional period without being tested against the national standard.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The European Commission is considering a possible extension to the transition period as currently provided under article 5.3 of the personal protective equipment directive, 89/686/EEC. Until the precise details of any amendment are known, the arrangements during the transition period remain as set out in that directive.

Energy Technology Support Unit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the energy technology support unit.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The ETSU is a unit within the UK Atomic Energy Authority which provides management and other services to a number of my Department's energy R and D programmes, including that on renewable energy.

My Department is considering a recommendation in a recent Energy Select Committee report on renewable energy that an analysis be undertaken of the costs and benefits of separating ETSU from the UKAEA in order to demonstrate its impartiality. The Government will be giving their response to the Committee recommendation in due course.

Electricity Savings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has any plans to meet the director of OFFER to discuss initiatives to promote electricity savings.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 13 May, Official Report column 136.

SCOTLAND

Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was granted to farmers in Scotland through the farm and conservation grant scheme—heather and woodland regeneration section—in 1990-91.

Mr. Lang: £15,973 was paid for heather and woodland generation in Scotland in 1990-91.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was granted to farmers in Scotland in 1990-91 through the farm diversification scheme; and if he will give a breakdown of this expenditure between the various activities eligible for grants.

Mr. Lang: £114,055 was paid in grants under the farm diversification grant scheme in Scotland in 1990-91. A breakdown of these figures by the various eligible enterprises is as follows.

Enterprise type	Grant paid £
Tourist accommodation	60,775
Horse enterprises	22,732
Food processing	21,123
Catering	2,300
Farm shop	2,250
Non-food agricultural produce	1,225
Feasibility and marketing	3,650
	114,055

Social Workers, Ayr

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will investigate the implications of the Ayr sheriff court finding which concluded that social workers distorted facts in a children in care situation with respect to one family; and if he will make a statement on the wider implications of the finding of Ayr sheriff court for children in other families with whom Ayr social workers have been dealing.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I understand that a complaint has been made to the procurator fiscal about the actions of social workers involved in a case concerning children in Ayrshire. This complaint is under investigation and it would not be proper for me to comment on it or any implications arising from it.

Fluoride

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made in artificially increasing the fluoride content of the water supply in Scotland during the most recent 12-month period for which information is available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Guidance on the implementation of schemes to fluoridate public water supplies was issued to health boards and water authorities in Scotland in June 1991. This included advice that the Scottish Office is prepared to consider assistance of up to 60 per cent of the capital costs of schemes.

No schemes have yet been introduced in Scotland, but consideration is being given to the matter by health boards in many areas, in conjunction with water authorities to which decisions in relation to fluoridation ultimately fall.

Whisky

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of people directly employed in the Scotch whisky industry in each of the regional authorities of Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Employment figures are available only for plants manufacturing Scotch whisky as their principal product and employing 11 or more employees in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available.

Manufacturing employment in the whisky industry in 1990 by regional authority (rounded to the nearest 100)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current breakdown of employment activity in the Scotch whisky industry by (a) maltings, (b) distilleries, (c) maturation warehouses, (d) blending and bottling plants, (e) distribution warehouses, (f) by-products, (g) offices, (h) visitor centres and (i) others; and what was the comparable situation in 1982.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: This information is unavailable at the level of disaggregation requested. Employment figures are available only for plants manufacturing Scotch whisky as their principal product. Some or all of the activities given in the question may be included in employment for individual plants.

The table shows manufacturing employment in whisky and other related industries in Scotland in plants employing 11 or more employees in 1982 and 1990, the latest year for which figures are available.

European Drugs Monitoring Squad

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria is to be used by the Scottish Office in recruiting staff to serve on the European drugs monitoring squad; how many staff he expects to be recruited to serve in Scotland; and what central resourcing will be made available.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Detailed negotiations about the establishment of a European drug monitoring centre are still under way and the final text of the required regulation has yet to be agreed with our Community partners. Once the modalities and structure for the centre have been agreed we will be addressing the issues of resourcing and staffing.

Drug Addicts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest total number of registered drug addicts for each type of drug in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Information on addicts notified to the Home Office from Scotland is collected on a health board rather than regional basis. The total number of addicts notified to the Home Office by health board and by type of drug in 1991 is shown in the table.

Drug addicts notified to the Home office during 1991 by type of drug[1] to which addiction was reported and Health Board[2]

[1] As an addict can be reported as addicted to more than one notifiable drug the figures for individual drugs cannot be added together to produce totals.

[2] Where an addict was notified more than once in 1991, this refers to the health board of the doctor who made the first notification.

EC Cohesion Fund

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what measures his Department is taking to publicise the funds available for environmental projects and transport infrastructure through the EC cohesion fund; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what mechanisms are being put in place to allow regions in Scotland to take advantage of the funds that will be made available through the EC cohesion fund; what representations he has received so far on the subject of the cohesion fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 22 May 1992]: No assistance will be available to Scotland through the cohesion fund which was agreed in principle at the European Council at Maastricht. Under the protocol on economic and social cohesion, the fund will assist EC member states whose per capita GNP is less than 90 per cent. of the Community average—Portugal, Spain, Greece and the Republic of Ireland—provided they meet certain macro-economic policy conditions. No measures have therefore been taken to publicise the cohesion fund in Scotland and no representations on this matter have been received.

TRANSPORT

Birmingham Relief Road

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the 1988 inquiry report on the proposal for a Birmingham northern relief road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The draft orders which were the subject of the inquiry have been withdrawn.

Railways

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his safety and regulatory powers under railways legislation.

Mr. Roger Freeman: The responsibility for running a safe and efficient railway is placed by statute on British Rail. The Secretary of State has safety powers under the Regulation of Railways Act 1871, the Railway Employment (Prevention of Accidents) Act 1900, the Road and Rail Traffic Act 1933 and level crossing enactments. The powers relate to the approval and inspection of new works, the making of safety rules, and to the investigation of accidents. More detailed information is contained in appendix 11 of the 1990 annual report on the safety record of railways, copies of which are in the Library. Some of these powers are amended by the Transport and Works Act 1992.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the service provided by British Rail on the Fenchurch Street, Tilbury, Southend line meets the specified quality targets set by his predecessor in December 1989.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Between January and April of this year, the London, Tilbury and Southend line achieved, on average, the target set in 1989 for peak punctuality. This is most encouraging and reflects the efforts of British Rail staff on the line. Reliability remains a problems and was below target over the same period. BR has told me that the current £50 million resignalling programme is the key to improving reliability.

Parking Spaces (Disabled People)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to enable an automatic fine to be imposed on motorists illegally occupying designated parking spaces for the disabled.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is already an offence for an able-bodied person to use a parking place reserved for an orange badge holder on the public highway or in a local authority off-street car park which has been designated by an order made under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. The offence carries a maximum penalty of £400.

My Department has no jurisdiction over spaces in private car parks reserved for disabled people. It is for individual operators of these car parks to take whatever steps they consider necessary to see that these spaces are not misused.

Sea Freight

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the value of sea freight between United Kingdom ports in each year from 1983 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Data on the value of sea freight between United Kingdom ports are not available.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: The total expenditure on the Department's press and public relations office since 1984-85 is as follows:

Year	£
1984-85	339,426
1985-86	354,393
1986-87	363,446
1987-88	389,473
1988-89	437,950
1989-90	451,214
1990-91	517,905
1991-92	587,665
[1]1992-93	614,109

[1]Budget.

These figures cover the overall costs of running the press office, calculated using the ready reckoner for staff-related costs.

Before 1984-85 the information division was a common service of the Departments of Transport and the Environment and the Property Services Agency.

London Taxis (Seat Belts)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when London taxis first had fixing points for rear seat belts; and what estimate he has of the number of London taxis with fixing points but without rear seat belts.

Mr. Norris: From 1 April 1982 new London taxis were required to be fitted with anchorages for rear seat belts. All cabs manufactured since 1 April 1987 must be fitted with seat belts for forward-facing passengers.

Cabs licensed to carry four persons must be fitted with two inertia reel type seat belts and an additional lap type seat belt must be fitted to cabs licensed to carry five persons. Cabs manufactured prior to 1 April 1987 may be fitted with approved type seat belts, but they are not compulsory. Where there is provision for a wheelchair passenger, an approved type seat belt must be fitted.

There is not available data on the number of London taxis with fixing points but without rear seat belts. However I understand that at present 8,250 London taxis are fitted with seat belts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consult on requiring the fitting of rear belts to London taxis with fixing points; if he will estimate the time and cost of fitting rear belts to a London taxi with fixing points; and what tests are made of the safety standards of such rear belts in respect of the ease with which they can be drawn out.

Mr. Norris: I have no plans to require the fitting of rear seat belts to London taxis built between 1 April 1982 and 1 April 1987 which have fixing points. As for private cars, fitting rear seat belts to these vehicles is voluntary.

The cost, inclusive of VAT, of fitting rear seat belts to those taxis with fixing points is estimated as of the order of £130 asssuming approximately one hour's labour.

Seat belts are tested during the vehicle's annual inspection at the Public Carriage Office. Among the things checked are the security of fixture, condition, ability to extend and return and the locking mechanism. The examiners in addition check to ensure that the belts are not hidden behind the seats. The PCO also carries out spot checks at taxi ranks and so on. "Unfit" notices are issued if the belts are defective.

Land Compensation

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has to offer ex-gratia payments for cases where the provisions of the Land Compensation Act 1973 cannot be waived.

Mr. Norris: The Secretary of State is not empowered to make payments under the Land Compensation Act 1973 other than in accordance with the provisions of that Act.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has to vary the amount of compensation to be paid in cases where his Department admits to a careless error.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is only permitted to make payments as prescribed in the statute, or on an ex-gratia basis in order to relieve hardship caused by official failure or unreasonable delay.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the Land Compensation Act 1973.

Mr. Norris: I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, who has responsibility for this matter, has no plans to amend the land Compensation Act 1973.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The percentage of Department of Transport staff registered as disabled at 1 June 1991 was 1.3 per cent.—185. The Department is aware of a further 188 staff who have indicated that they have disabilities but who have not registered. The Department aims to provide access to a full range of recruitment and career opportunities for all people with disabilities. The Department also follows the civil service code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities by, for example, supplying appropriate aids and equipment for staff with disabilities.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what distribution has taken place within this Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication,"Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers."

Mr. Norris: The publication has been distributed to all managers within the Department of Transport carrying responsibility for the authorisation of payments to suppliers.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Norris: The Department's policy, in line with the principles of the citizens charter, is to pay all invoices within the contracted period, unless delay is unavoidable because of a dispute or for some other legitimate reason. Where there are no specified terms the policy is to pay invoices within 30 days.

Learner Drivers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to make it compulsory for all learner drivers to drive with qualified and registered instructors at all times; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Freedom to practice under the supervision of a friend or relative who is an experienced qualified driver widens the opportunity for learners to gain experience. Recent research indicates that learner drivers who supplement professional instruction in this way are better prepared for their driving test.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average waiting time for driving tests in (a) Paisley, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The average waiting time for driving tests at Paisley is six weeks, in Scotland five weeks, and in Great Britain five weeks. Driving tests in Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Department of the Environment.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that the high speed rail link from Ashford to central London will terminate at Stratford, east London, and will follow closely the route devised by Ove Arup; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's preference remains that the rail link should approach London from the east, via Stratford, and terminate at King's Cross. The route is currently being refined on the basis of the broad corridor published last October.

Rail System, Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to support investment for the improvement of existing freight railway lines in Wales so as to enable them to carry passenger traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for BR and the local authorities concerned.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of investment by British Rail in rolling stock for the Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth railway line.

Mr. Freeman: I understand most services on this line are operated by British Rail's flagship diesel unit, the class 158. The remaining services are also operated by modern diesel units—class 150/156s.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the relative fuel efficiency of rail and road transport and the effect of increased use of rail travel on the natural environment of rural Wales.

Mr. Freeman: A comparison of CO2 emissions per kilometre is a useful indication of the relative fuel efficiency of various modes of transport. We have estimated that a typical regional railway service produces 80 to 85 per cent of the CO2 emissions of an average car per 100 person kilometres travelled. This figure reflects the very low levels of off-peak demand on some rural services which involve relatively long journeys. British Rail's regional railways business is currently undergoing a replacement of rolling stock which, when complete, should lead to a halving in fuel consumption. There is also substantial scope for increased fuel efficiency in road vehicles. The effect of increased rail travel on the natural environment of Wales would depend on the amount of traffic diverted from road and the extent to which new rail services and infrastructure were required.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: The spending by my Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising, and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year is as follows:

£'000

	Television	Radio	Newspaper	Other
1979-80	4,141	62	105	1,532
1980-81	3,502	336	129	1,737
1981-82	3,615	6	410	1,457
1982-83	2,319	98	816	1,415
1983-84	4,655	22	334	1,488
1984-85	1,723	207	476	2,873
1985-86	70	858	834	4,026
1986-87	72	520	738	4,489
1987-88	2,310	50	140	3,010
1988-89	1,867	110	365	3,367
1989-90	1,930	233	982	3,289
1990-91	3,122	145	833	3,962
1991-92	3,870	176	883	4,593

Detailed decisions have not yet been taken on expenditure by media for 1992-93, but the overall figure is expected to be approximately £10 million.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the possible suspension of air and road links to Yugoslavia.

Mr. Norris: The United Nations Security Council resolution adopted last weekend prohibits any flights of any aircraft coming from or destined for Yugoslavia. It does not extend to road links with Yugoslavia. But there is a total prohibition on the export of all goods to Yugoslavia, except, under certain conditions, food and medical products, and the import of all goods originating from there.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department is offering to tour operators and scheduled operators who may be affected by any restricted access to Yugoslav airspace; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Nations Security Council resolution prohibits landing and take-off at Yugoslav airports. The resolution does not specifically deal with overflying Yugoslavia, but we are considering the implications of the resolution for overflying and the payment by carriers of overflying charges. At the moment our advice is that United Kingdom air lines should avoid overflying Croatia and Bosnia and airspace within 30 nautical miles of the Croatian border with Yugoslavia.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those EC member states collecting light dues after 1992;

(2) if he will publish his proposals for ending light dues after 1992.

Mr. Norris: Within the EC I understand that only the United Kingdom, Ireland and Greece have systems of light dues; but that Denmark charges its own flag vessels for the use of its Decca radionavigation system. I am unaware of any changes in the position after 1992, and my right hon. Friend has no proposals to end light dues in this country.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total contribution by the Exchequer to light dues charged by the Republic of Ireland in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norris: None.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his conclusions on light dues, following his consultations with the British Ports Federation.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend is considering the proposals made by the British Ports Federation for extending light dues to pleasure craft, together with the responses to the widespread consultation which was undertaken about them.

Air Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 228, at what stage an assessment of changes in levels of carbon dioxide, nitrous oxides and low level ozone will be undertaken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: If a route is selected for this proposed scheme for further development, an assessment of air pollution will be undertaken during the detailed design stage before publication of the environmental statement.

Cycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been done by his Department or commissioned by him to assess the significance of cycling from the perspectives of (a) environmental protection, (b) health and (c) energy efficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The cycling research projects undertaken by or on behalf of the Department in recent years have primarily been concerned with establishing means of improving traffic conditions for cyclists, particularly their safety. The three perspectives specified have not so far formed the subject of specific research projects.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those posts in his Department which have a specific remit to promote cycling (a) nationally and (b) at regional level; and how many of them are currently filled.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department aims to improve conditions for cycling, with emphasis given to making it safer. We do not have any posts with a specific remit to promote cycling, but a substantial number of staff at HQ, in regional offices and at the Transport Research Laboratory undertake cycling work of various kinds.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those areas where regional offices have advised on specific inclusion of safe cycle routes and of those list those which have received funding from his Department; and what percentage these schemes are of the overall spending.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is not held centrally, and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secetary of State for Transport what response he has made to the representations of the Cyclists Touring Club.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has regular contacts with the Cyclists' Touring Club at official level. I would be pleased to agree to a request to meet CTC representatives soon.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce targets to raise the level of cycle use within all local authority areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Levels of demand for cycling, the need for facilities, and the resources, vary considerably across the country. Decisions on appropriate levels of provision for an area should be agreed by the relevant local authorities.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of traffic surveys carried out or funded by his Department over each of the last five years and say how many of those recorded cycling.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This information is not available centrally, and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account has been taken of cycling in his Department's contribution to the United Nations Earth summit in Brazil.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government recognise that cycling is an efficient and environmentally friendly mode of transport. Agenda 21, an action plan to guide the world community towards sustainable development, which will be launched at the conference, recommends that all countries should encourage non-motorised modes of transport by providing safe cycleways and footpaths in urban and suburban centres as appropriate. The Government support this recommendation.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of journeys in the United Kingdom are currently made by bicycle; and if he has comparable figures for the percentage of bicycle journeys in other European countries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The 1985-86 national travel survey indicates that 2·3 per cent. of all journeys of 1 mile or more are made by cycle. We have no comparable data for other European countries.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what talks he has had with British Rail to require guarantees about reasonable cycle access to rolling stock;

(2) if he will require all new orders for rolling stock to be built to a specification to incorporate cycle accommodation.

Mr. Freeman: The design of rolling stock is a matter for British Rail. BR's policy regarding cycles is to seek to accommodate them whenever possible. However, particularly at peak times on the busier routes, they must balance the interests of cyclists and those of other passengers.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what activity his Department is planning as its participation in national bike week.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I understand there is no particular national focus, or major launch for national bike week which is taking place between 20 and 28 June. The emphasis this year has been placed on local fun rides, races, educational events and demonstrations. There are a number of charity bike rides planned. These include the annual London to Brighton ride on 21 June, which regularly includes riders from the Department of Transport.

Rail Incident, Brierfield

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the railway inspectorate to investigate the safety implications of the incident on Monday 18 May in Brierfield in the Pendle constituency involving damage to a train by a coping stone.

Mr. Freeman: This incident arose as a result of vandalism which the British Transport police are investigating. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is aware of the action taken by the British Rail's civil engineer following the incident and is satisfied that there is no further risk to either the public or to railway staff.

Emergency Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the subsidy paid to British Telecom for emergency frequency watch keeping for the last five years.

Mr. Norris: British Telecom is contracted to provide a distress watch service for the Department of Transport on 500 Khz and 2182 Khz using BT's network of coast radio stations. The annual cost to the Department for the distress watch service over the past five years has been as follows:

Year	Cost £000
1987-88	1, 210
1988-89	842
1989-90	916
1990-91	1,395
1991-92	1,237

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the craft, type and purposes of vessels operated by Her Majesty's coastguard.

Mr. Norris: Her Majesty's coastguard operates a fleet of 31 general purpose boats consisting of 20 5·4 m Rider semi-rigid inflatable boats, three 5·1 m Carson semi-rigid inflatable boats, three 4·6 m inflatable boats, three 4·0 m Sea Rider semi-rigid inflatable boats, one 6·0 m Sea Rider semi-rigid inflatable boat, and one 6·0 m Cabin rigid-hulled boat.

Her Majesty's coastguard recently redefined its boat policy to identify two primary functions for coastguard boats—(i) incident prevention by active patrolling in areas considered to be of high risk potential, or areas where land-based patrolling is limited in scope or impossible, for example, river estuaries, and (ii) to transport men and equipment to incidents, for example, on offshore islands.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to invite competition for the emergency listening contract.

Mr. Norris: Only BT has the necessary network of coast radio stations and the equipment to operate such a service. Discussions are presently under way with BT to review the cost of the service and the scope for savings.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many coastguard stations are listening on 2182 kHz.

Mr. Norris: Since 2182 Khz is covered by BT under the distress watch arrangements, there is no obligation for any coastguard station to maintain a continuous listening watch on this frequency, although all coastguard rescue centres have the capability to do so if required. All coastguard rescue centres maintain a continuous listening watch on channel 16, which is the international VHF/FM distress and safety frequency.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will outline his plans for modernising the Decca master and slave chain stations;

(2) if he has any plans to extend Loran C to the whole of the United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend's predecessor announced his proposals for the future of radionavigation in United Kingdom waters last summer—Official Report, 21 June 1991, column 336. That announcement reflects the current position in that there is no proposal to establish a Loran C transmitter in the United Kingdom. Since then the general lighthouse authorities have entered into a contract with Racal Decca Marine Navigation Limited for the modernisation and continued operation of the existing United Kingdom Decca chains. I understand that a number of countries may still establish a more limited Loran C system which would give coverage in United Kingdom waters without a United Kingdom transmitter. Developments in this field will be monitored to ensure that the best interests of those who use and pay for marine radionavigation systems are served.

Weather Information

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the French authorities on the propagation of Weather Fox information in English.

Mr. Norris: This is a matter for the Meteorological Office agency. I am asking the chief executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Cars, Central London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the daily car movements in and out of central London by months for 1991 and the corresponding figure for each year since 1980.

Mr. Norris: The available information is given in the table. Counts are made every two years: monthly data are not collected, 1991 figures are not yet available.

Daily car flows in and out of central London

Thousands

	Number
1981	1,078
1983	1,071
1985	1,105
1987	1,086
1989	1,160

Shipping Register

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the main requirements of his inspectors for flagging in, broken down into numbers per year by vessel type.

Mr. Norris: Surveyors from the Department examine all aspects of safety and marine pollution of any ship which intends to flag on to the United Kingdom register.

The major items inspected include lifesaving appliances, fire appliances, navigation equipment, radio equipment, crew accommodation, stability characteristics, marine pollution control and monitoring equipment and manning levels.

The table shows the number of vessels flagged in for the years 1987-88 to 1991-92. All the foregoing items would be inspected on all these ships.

Ships flagging in numbers per year by vessel type

Year	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
Passenger[1]	—	—	—	3	3
Tanker	10	3	6	4	2
Cargo ship[1]	10	10	10	12	4
Dry bulk carrier	—	1	6	5	4
Others	13	14	25	15	11

[1] Including roll-on/roll-off.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average cost of a vessel flagging into the United Kingdom register for each of the last five years expressed as (a) per vessel and (b) per tonne.

Mr. Norris: The only costs available to the Department are those charged directly to the owners for the attendance of the surveyors. The average costs for these surveyors for the last five years are as follows.

Year	Average cost per vessel	Cost per gross registered ton
1987-88	3,409	0·49
1988-89	2,754	1·16
1989-90	2.386	0·65
1990-91	4,297	1·45
1991-92	4,619	1·50

M1-M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 229, if he will identify those properties, within the Wakefield constituency, which could be demolished as a result of the construction of an M1-M62 motorway link along both proposed routes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to the hon. Member with details of the preliminary information we have on possible property demolition.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) public rights of way and (b) bridle ways will be affected by the proposed M1-M62 (i) yellow route and (ii) purple route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Based on a preliminary survey of rights of way, it has so far been identified that the yellow option would be crossed by two bridleways and 20 footpaths, and the purple route option by three bridleways and 24 footpaths.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 228, at what stage assessments will be undertaken to determine the extent and implications of farm severance in the development of proposals for an M1-M62 motorway link.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: If a route is selected for this proposed scheme for further development, an assessment of farm severance would be undertaken during the detailed design stage before the order for publication.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has available about areas of archaeological importance which may be affected by the proposed M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Information has been supplied by the West Yorkshire archaeology service from its records. I will write to the hon. Member with details.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 229, what evaluation has been undertaken into the role of rail, when considering alternatives to the M1-M62 road link; how the balance between forms of transport is to be achieved; what action his Department takes to ensure these aims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No direct evaluation has been undertaken into the role of rail with regard to the M1-M62 scheme, but the scheme would cater for traffic with a wider variety of origins and destinations than could be realistically served by rail. We do not believe that it is our role to tell people where and how they should travel. However, we are supporting a high level of investment in rail as well as roads so that each form of transport can play its part in meeting the needs of travellers. We have also been working with the bus industry and the local authority associations on ways to encourage greater use of buses. And we offer freight facilities grants to encourage the transfer of freight from road to rail or water in appropriate cases.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport using current figures, what would be the assessed (a) annual and (b) 10-yearly maintenance cost for the purple and yellow routes for the M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Based on standard unit rates at current prices, the assessed annual maintenance costs of the yellow and purple routes are £160,000 and £190,000 respectively. The 10-year maintenance costs are assessed at £2·59 million and £3·02 million respectively.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessments have been made of vehicular volume on a daily basis along the proposed (a) purple and (b) yellow routes for the M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The average traffic flows forecast for the turn of the century on the purple route option are between 43,000 and 76,000 and on the yellow route option between 50,000 and 77,000 vehicles per day, the lower figure in each case being at the eastern end of the scheme and the higher figure being at the western end.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, columns 228-29, if he will identify the areas of woodland directly affected by the M1-M62 link road proposals and produce details of woodland of ecological interest which could be adversely affected.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have already written to the hon. Member with a list of sites of ecological interest, which included woodlands. All known woodland areas directly affected by the route options is included in the environmental assessment framework. I will send the hon. Member a copy.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May 1992, columns 228-29, if he will outline the evidence underlying his conclusion that viable alternatives are not available to the proposed M1-M62 motorway link.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Most traffic goes by road and will continue to do so and the large majority of passenger journeys are by car. Other forms of transport have an important role to play, but cannot offer the same flexibility. This conclusion is reinforced by a recent study of traffic across the Pennines in the M62 corridor which shows that around half the trips between some city centres are by rail, but only 7 per cent. of total trips.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extent of hedgerow destruction is envisaged in the construction of the M1-M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No assessment of the effect on hedgerows has been made. Detailed design of any option would include substantial landscaping and planting proposals.

Bridges

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the steps that are being taken by British Rail to ensure that bridges across the permanent way are maintained in good order.

Mr. Freeman: The Secretary of State meets the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss various matters, including safety and safety related issues. British Rail's policy is to maintain bridges across the permanent way in good order.

Rail Services, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about the reliability of late night inter-city trains between London and Liverpool, and with the operators of Merseyrail about the reliability of local services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I am not aware of any major problems with the reliability of late night InterCity services between London and Liverpool.

Merseyrail services are sponsored by Merseyside PTE. They set quality of service targets for local services. It would be for the PTE to take up any question of the reliability of these services with British Rail.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation has been done on the effects of the A1 to City red route; and if he will make a statement as to its traffic, environmental and social effect.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Member was sent a copy of the latest evaluation of the 8-mile red route pilot scheme in March. The effects are encouragingly beneficial. The main facts are:

casualties down significantly more in 1991 than on the rest of London's roads; 620 new free short term parking spaces introduced and no permitted parking places removed;
bus lanes almost doubled;
17 new or improved pedestrian crossing points and four new cycle crossings in progress; bus and general traffic journey times and reliability substantially improved;
1,700 more people a week using the No. 43 bus service which goes along much of the route; traffic being attracted off less suitable adjacent roads;
no evidence to suggest that red route measures have contributed of themselves to reduced shopping activity.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of red route are planned for London; and on what date he expects to bring forward proposals.

Mr. Norris: I am considering the response received to the consultation document on the proposed red route network and expect to make an announcement shortly. Until that time I cannot say what the mileage of the network will be.

Passenger Boat Regulations Committee

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the composition and objectives of the passenger boat regulations committee.

Mr. Norris: A proposed steering committee for small passenger boats will include three marine directorate district chief surveyors and representatives of the small passenger boat operators' associations. The committee will discuss the effect of future safety legislation on the United Kingdom small passenger boat industry, the problems of implementing current legislation, and general safety matters relating to the small passenger boat industry.

Ports and Airports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the United Kingdom airports in public and municipal ownership.

Mr. Norris: As at 12 November 1991, the list of active airfields available to civil aircraft, in public and municipal ownership in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, was as follows:

Civil aviation authority owned and operated

Benbecula	Stornoway
Inverness (Dalcross)	Sumburgh
Islay (Port Ellen)	Tiree
Kirkwall	Wick

Northern Ireland office owned

Belfast (Aldergrove)—operated by Northern Ireland Airports Ltd

Municipally owned and operated

Birmingham	Lerwick (Tingwall)
Blackpool	Londonderry (Eglinton)
Bournemouth (Hurn)	Luton
Bristol (Lulsgate)	Manchester (Ringway)
Cardiff-Wales	Newcastle
Carlisle	North Ronaldsay
Coventry	Norwich
Dornoch	Oban (North Connel)
Dundee (Riverside)	Papa Westray
East Midlands	Plockton
Eday	St. Marys (Isles of Scilly)
Exeter	Sanday
Glenforsa (Mull)	Shoreham
Gloucestershire	Southend
Haverfordwest	Southport (Birkdale Sands)
Hoy	Stronsay
Humberside	Swansea
Ipswich	Teesside
Isle of Skye	Westray
Leed Bradford

Municipally owned and privately operated

Biggin Hill	Plymouth (Roborough)
Doncaster	Rochester
Flotta	Scatsta
Lands End (St. Just)	Unst
Nottingham (Tollerton)	Wycombe Air Park (Booker)

Ministry of Defence airfields available to civil aircraft

Abingdon	Lossiemouth
Benson	Lyneham
Binbrook	Machrihanish
Brize Norton	Manston/Kent
Chalgrove (privately operated)	Middle Wallop
Chivenor	Mona
Church Fenton	Newton
Coltishall	Northolt
Cosford	Odiham
Cranwell	St. Athan
Culdrose	St. Mawgan/Newquay
Dishforth	Shawbury
Elvington	Swanton Morley
Farnborough	Topcliffe
Finningley	Valley
Halton	Waddington
Kemble	Wattisham
Leeming	Wittering
Lee-on-Solent	Woodvale
Leuchars	Yeovilton

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the United Kingdom ports in public, municipal and trust port ownership.

Mr. Norris: The Department has no complete lists. Most ports are of only local significance. In the public sector, there are approximately 75 local authority ports, not including some 200 "marine works" which come within the responsibilities of the Scottish Office. The most important of those are Portsmouth, Sunderland, Workington, Ramsgate, Colchester and the oil ports of Sullom Voe and Flotta. There are no other major publicly owned ports. There are about 100 trust ports in Great Britain, of which the most important are Aberdeen, Blyth, Cromarty Firth, Dover, Dundee, Great Yarmouth, Harwich Haven, Ipswich, Lerwick, London, Milford Haven, Montrose, Peterhead, Poole, Shoreham and Tyne. In Northern Ireland the principal trust ports are Belfast, Londonderry, and Warrenpoint.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will calculate the estimated asset value of each airport and sea port in public, municipal or trust port ownership.

Mr. Norris: This information is not available to the Department.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make annual reports and accounts of trust ports publicly available.

Mr. Norris: We have no plans for this at present.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those trust ports that make their annual accounts available to the general public through their local offices.

Mr. Norris: The Department has no information about this.

Public Transport Investment

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will increase investment in public transport.

Mr. Freeman: BR invested just over £1 billion in 1991-92, the highest figure in real terms for 30 years. In 1992-93 BR is expected to invest a similar amount. London Transport invested around £600 million in 1991-92 and is currently expected to invest over £1 billion in 1992-93, three times greater in real terms than the level of investment five years ago. Bus and light rail investment outside London is primarily the responsibility of the private sector and of local authorities.

Rail System (Vandalism)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will initiate a joint campaign with British Rail to draw to the attention of school children the possible consequences to British Rail staff and passengers of vandalism to trains and track.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail and the Government attach top priority to railway safety. BR's project manager for anti-trespass and vandalism liaises with British Transport police to co-ordinate the efforts of dedicated teams engaged on school visits. Supporting publicity material includes videos and the "Roald Dahl Guide to Rail Safety". More than 4 million copies of this booklet have been sent to schools by BR. The message that children should never play near trains, stations or tracks is strongly endorsed by the Department's "Safety on the Move" campaign.

Fuel Efficiency

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to set a mandatory fuel efficiency standard for vehicles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. The United Kingdom is already working with other member states of the European Community with a view to agreeing EC limits on emissions of carbon dioxide from motor vehicles. Bearing in mind the close correlation between CO_2 and fuel consumption, the Government do not consider separate measures to be necessary to deal with fuel efficiency.

Japanese Knotweed

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient investment is made into British Rail to eradicate the overgrowth of Japanese knotweed along railway embankments.

Mr. Freeman: The management of railway embankments is an operational matter for British Rail. Any programme for eradicating Japanese knotweed would form part of its normal maintenance works, which is funded from revenue income.

VHF Radio

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he is making on direct calling for VHF radios.

Mr. Norris: At present it is not considered that the addition of VHF direct calling would be worthwhile.

Trinity House

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review progress by Trinity House on automation.

Mr. Norris: Progress on the automation of lighthouses is reviewed annually with Trinity House as part of the yearly review of budgets.

Passenger Vessels (Safety)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the International Maritime Organisation recommendations on passenger vessel stability for through-deck vessels.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom expressed dissatisfaction with the recent IMO standards adopted for existing ro-ro passenger ship residual stability and entered a reservation. We are now pursuing the adoption of higher standards over a reasonable time scale within the European Community.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 15 May 1992, Official Report, column 229, if he will identify areas of land known to be contaminated.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: So far three areas of contaminated land have been identified. These are a tip and old sewage works at Bradley and the Spen Valley refuse tip at Ravensthorpe. A detailed survey covering this aspect would form part of any further design work.

Rail Services (Punctuality)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what form of statistics he holds on the punctuality of British Rail passenger services; what criteria are used when they are compiled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The British Rail passengers charter, which was published in March, committed British Rail to keeping passengers informed of how it performs compared with targets agreed annually with the Government. The charter document, which is widely available, sets out the criteria used to measure British Rail's performance in several areas, including punctuality.

On 11 May, British Rail published the first of its "TrackRecord" reports on reliability and punctuality for each of the 44 passenger route groups its operates. These reports which will be updated every four weeks, can be seen at British Rail stations throughout Britain.

Bus Deregulation, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to deregulate buses in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government remain firmly committed to the deregulation of the London bus market. We believe that deregulation has been a significant success in the rest of the country, producing a 19 per cent. increase in route miles and a one third reduction in operating costs. We want to see these benefits extended to bus users in London, too. We remain convinced that Londoners will benefit from having the key decisions on bus services taken by operators, who are close to the local market and whose survival depends on meeting their customers' needs. We shall be introducing the necessary legislation as soon as possible.

Non-ferrous Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to improve safety standards relating to the transport of non-ferrous waste; and if he will take action to ensure the availability of guideline precautions for handling such waste materials while in transit.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: "Non-ferrous" materials are not a discrete category of waste and there are no special provisions governing their transport. There are however safety regulations for the transport of dangerous goods, including new regulations which have just come into force; regulations for the transport of radio-active materials; and regulations requiring the proper securing of loads on vehicles, which will be reinforced by measures coming into force later this year. We have no present proposals to expand these provisions further.

These regulations are distinct from the registration of carriers provisions introduced under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, for which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible. Controlled waste may only be transported by a carrier registered with a waste regulation authority, unless specifically exempted by regulations. The duty of care provisions under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 make it an offence to give waste to a carrier who is not registered or exempt.

London Underground

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the quality of service objectives for London Underground.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the chairman of London Transport on 27 May setting new quality of service objectives. The text of the letter was as follows.

Text of letter from John MacGregor, Secretary of State for Transport, to Wilfrid Newton, Chairman on London Transport, setting new quality of service objectives.

"Cecil Parkinson wrote to you in December 1989 setting quality of service objectives for both London Underground Limited (LUL) and London Transport's bus services covering the period up until 31 March 1992. This letter sets new objectives for London Underground which will run until 31 March 1994. I will be writing to you shortly with new objectives for LT bus services.

"There have been important developments for the Underground since 1989. In June 1991 the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) published their report on LUL. They concluded that more investment was needed in the existing network to bring it up to an acceptably modern standard. In recognition of this, last year's public expenditure rsettlement provided record levels of grant to London Transport, which will allow record levels of investment by LUL. By 1993/94, London Underground will be investing over £700 million per annum in its core business, the level which, in evidence to the MMC, LUL said was necessary to make real progress towards providing an acceptably modern metro.

"A number of important initiatives currently being progressed within LUL should help to ensure that these public resources are used to best effect. In November 1991 London Underground published their Company Plan, an extensive agenda of improvements to the safety, quality and efficiency of passenger services. I welcome this initiative, and will continue to support London Underground through the various stages of its implementation. I also look forward to the publication of LUL's Customer Charter which will set out the Underground's plans to increase its accountability to its customers, and make commitments to continuing improvements to services.

"The objectives which I am setting you today are intended to build on the twin thrusts of better customer awareness and higher quality services. I am setting LUL twelve new objectives, some covering aspects of your services which we have not formally monitored before. There are specific targets in each objective to be achieved by 31 March 1993 and 31 March 1994. I am setting you revised objectives for improvement in service volume and regularity, lift and escalator reliability and the availability of ticket purchasing facilities. I am also looking to you to build on the successes of recent years and achieve a further reduction in the levels of violent crime on the Underground. I am for the first time setting you an objective covering station closures, a major source of inconvenience to passengers. And, as recommended by the MMC and in line with the Government's Citizen's Charter initiative, I am setting you five targets for improving levels of customer satisfaction—with the cleanliness of your stations and trains, the quality of the information with which you provide your customers, and the helpfulness and availability of your staff. The detailed objectives are set out in the Annex to this letter.

"I believe that these objectives will provide the right challenge for London Underground in its continuing efforts to deliver the high standard of service which today's, and tomorrow's Underground customers expect and deserve. I will be monitoring performance against them regularly, and will be asking you to consider how you can best publish your results, so that passengers can see for themselves what progress is being made."

The text of the new objectives is as follows:

Customer Satisfaction Measures[1]

LUL will improve the quality of passenger information on trains to achieve a customer satisfaction rating of 78 per cent. by 1 April 1993 and 83 per cent. by 1 April 1994. Information on stations will achieve a customer satisfaction rating of 76 per cent. by the same date in 1993 and 81 per cent. by the same date in 1994. The average levels of performance in 1991-92 were 71 per cent. and 68 per cent. respectively. Seventy six per cent. of customers will rate train cleanliness as acceptable or better in 1993 and 81 per cent. in 1994. Eighty five per cent. of customers will rate the cleanliness of stations as acceptable or better in 1993 and 87 per cent. in 1994. These targets compare with average performance levels of 68 per cent. and 82 per cent. respectively in 1991-92.

Staff helpfulness and availability will improve so that 83 per cent. of customers consider it acceptable or better in 1993 and 86 per cent. in 1994. Average performance in 1991-92 was 78 per cent.

[1] The measure used is the percentage of customers rating performance as "acceptable" or better, using data collected during LUL's monthly customer research surveys.

Trains in service in each peak

LUL will improve the percentage of scheduled trains running in the morning and evening peaks from 96·4 per cent. in 1991-92 to 97·5 per cent. by 1 April 1993 and 97·8 per cent. by 1 April 1994.

Train service intervals

LUL will achieve 91 per cent. of planned intervals between trains on frequent services by 31 March 1993. This is a new measure on which little data on current performance currently exists, it is therefore to be reviewed for 1993-94.

Escalator service in each peak

Throughout each peak hour period, for both the morning and the evening peaks, LUL will achieve 87 per cent. escalator availability by 1 April 1993 and 88 per cent. by the same date in 1994. This compares with a current performance in the peaks of 86 per cent.

Lifts in service in each peak

Throughout each peak hour period, both morning and evening, LUL will achieve 85 per cent. availability of lifts by 1 April 1993 and 88 per cent. by the same date in 1994. This compares with a current performance of 85 per cent.

Station closures

In each four week period, the number of station closures of twenty minuters or longer, and which are due to staff absence or equipment failure, will be reduced to fewer than 50 by 1 April 1993 and fewer than 30 by the same date in 1994. This compares with a current average of 100 closures per four week period.

Ticket purchasing facilities

In 1992-93, LUL will maintain the percentage of stations across the network offering at least one form of ticket issuing facility at 99·9 per cent. Before 31 March 1993, a revised target will be set including the condition that change should be available.

Violent crime

The number of violent crimes committed against Underground customers will reduce further in 1992-93.

DEFENCE

Cambodia

14. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support British forces and military and civilian experts are giving to the United Nations peace-keeping operations in Cambodia.

Mr. Rifkind: As part of the United Nations Transition Authority in Cambodia, the United Kingdom is providing 38 military observers, 13 mine clearance training experts, including the overall command of the UNTAC mine clearance training unit, and up to seventy naval personnel.

Lockerbie

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the involvement of service personnel in the Lockerbie clean-up.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although the tragedy happened almost three and a half years ago the excellent work done by the services under such distressing and demanding conditions has not been forgotten. In all, more than 8,000 man-days were contributed by the services during the 27 days of the operation, with a peak of more than 700 on the day after the crash, on 22 December 1988. The majority of effort was directed towards the search for bodies and wreckage.

Classified Documents

17. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on documents relating to wartime matters of his Department that remain classified.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department's policy is to release records after 30 years whenever possible, but a small proportion are withheld for varying periods on grounds such as national security or personal sensitivity.

Merchant Ships

18. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence requirements in respect of British merchant ships.

Mr. Aitken: The defence need for merchant shipping is kept under regular review as part of normal planning.

RAF Fylingdales

19. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange to visit RAF Fylingdales; and if he will make a statement on the timetable to make the new station operational.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend currently has no plans to visit RAF Fylingdales. I can confirm that the modernisation programme is on schedule.

Rail Freight

20. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to encourage the use of rail for freight by Ministry of Defence depots.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department uses the most convenient and cost effective methods to transport freight and has no plans to favour the use of rail over any other method of transport.

Bullying and Racial Harassment

21. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce bullying and racial harassment in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The services take a very serious view of bullying and racial harassment. It has been made clear throughout the services that bullying, racial harassment or other ill-treatment will not be tolerated. A range of measures to combat bullying has been introduced, including the banning of initiation ceremonies.

Kurdish People

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom defence forces are available in Turkey for use in the protection of the Kurds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom contribution to the coalition deterrent force in south-east Turkey comprises eight Jaguar reconnaissance/ground attack and two tanker aircraft plus ground support. In addition, the United Kingdom has a representative on the Coalition Military Co-ordination Committee.

Commonwealth of Independent States

23. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will indicate the range of contact between his officials and military representatives of the Commonwealth of Independent States; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD is steadily increasing its contacts including: meetings between United Kingdom and Russian nuclear experts and officials; co-operation programmes agreed under the auspicies of the North Atlantic Co-operation Council; and the recent seminar on democratic management of defence, held at the Royal United Services Institute in London on 18 and 19 May.

Surface Vessels

24. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will next be placing orders with United Kingdom shipyards for the construction of surface vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We plan further orders of type 23 frigates, single role minehunters, amphibious ships and support ships, but no decisions have been taken on their size and timing.

Dartmoor National Park

26. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the reasons of confidentiality which prevent him from disclosing the amount paid by his Department to the Duchy of Cornwall for the use of moorland and farming land on the Dartmoor national park for live firing.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our normal practice is not to disclose the amount payable for individual contracts between the Department and third parties on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

C130 Transport Aircraft

27. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his NATO counterparts about the replacement of the C130 transport aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Whilst my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has discussed with NATO partners the wider matter of strategic mobility, the specific issue of replacing C130 transport aircraft has not been raised.

Trident

25. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Aitken: The Trident programme is on time and within budget and continues to make satisfactory progress towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

28. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the PSA on the progress of the Trident construction project at the Clyde submarine base.

Mr. Aitken: Ministers maintain a close oversight over all aspects of the Trident programme, including construction at the Clyde submarine base, on which we are regularly briefed by MOD's project managers, PSA projects. I am having further correspondence and discussions with the PSA about matters raised by the hon. Member for Dumbarton in the House on 21 May, Official Report, column 471.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of future global deployments of anti-ballistic missile systems; and what are the implications for the level at which Trident is deployed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Currently, only Russia possesses operational anti-ballistic missiles (ABMs). The United States has outlined its proposals for ABM defences which will be discussed with NATO allies. Other countries have expressed an interest in gaining an anti-tactical ballistic missile (ATBM) capability against sub-strategic ballistic missiles. Trident will deploy the minimum number of warheads necessary to provide effective deterrence.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what studies his Department has undertaken to examine whether Trident could perform a sub-strategic nuclear role;

(2) if Trident will be capable of performing a sub-strategic nuclear role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 20 May, Official Report, column 187.

Housing

29. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve housing opportunities for ex-service personnel and their families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) announced on 24 February 1992 a package of improvements on housing opportunities for armed forces personnel leaving the services. My Department is also taking steps, in the short-term, to provide assistance to those being made redundant, or who are not being re-engaged and who find themselves in housing difficulty.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unoccupied Ministry of Defence units of accommodation there are in the city of Plymouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, 467 of the 2,858 service married quarters in the Plymouth area were vacant. Of these, 82 were undergoing modernisation, 61 were allocated to incoming service families and eight were in the process of being sold on the open market. There are plans for 170 dwellings to be sold to a housing association and a further 40 married quarters form part of the Ministry of Defence contribution to the Plymouth urban development corporation package. In addition, seven of the 12 civilian properties in the Plymouth area were vacant.

Armed Forces Parliamentary Scheme

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to continue the armed forces parliamentary scheme in the current Parliament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

HMS Swiftsure

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether HMS Swiftsure is to receive a second refit.

Mr. Aitken: No. Swiftsure is not required to sustain our plan for a long-term force level of around 12 nuclear-powered submarines, and she was consequently paid off in April this year.

Redevelopments

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how much the estimated final costs of recent redevelopments at (a) Ballykelly Shackleton barracks, (b) Plymouth Citadel and (c) Hollywood have risen from original estimates; and why.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Weapon Transporters

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in providing armoured nuclear weapon transporters and containers to Russia: at what cost; under what vote and subhead the expenditure falls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 9 March 1992.

Specifications for the vehicles and containers have been discussed with Russian officials, and proposals for procurement are being prepared. It is our intention to deliver the equipment at the earliest possible date.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the deployment of additional infantry battalions to Northern Ireland in January and February 1992 has had on his previous estimate of the extent to which the minimum emergency tour length target interval of 24 months will be met in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The additional infantry battalions were deployed for only nine weeks and seven weeks respectively. Such short-term deployments are not included in the calculation of emergency tour plot intervals and do not affect the previous estimate for 1993-94.

Trafalgar Submarines

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in defining the characteristics of followon Trafalgar class submarines.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) on 22 May. The design studies into a batch 2 Trafalgar class submarine are progressing satisfactorily and we expect to begin consideration of the results early next year.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 258, for how many batch 2 Trafalgar class hunter killer submarines he intends to invite tenders for design and construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: No decision has yet been made regarding the number of batch 2 Trafalgar class submarines required.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 258, whether he intends to restrict tenders for the design and construction of batch 2 Trafalgar submarines to VSEL; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We procure defence equipment through competition wherever practicable. In this case we would expect to invite tenders from any company willing and able to compete for the prime contractorship of the design and construction stage.

Submarine Training

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many submarine service trainees are currently awaiting part III training berths in submarines; how many have been waiting for over six months; and what steps he proposes to take to reduce the backlog.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Of the 359 ratings currently undergoing part III training, 100 are currently awaiting billets at sea; 12 have been waiting for a sea billet for more than six months. Measures that have been taken to improve this situation are:

(a) Additional time within the submarine programme has been allocated to part III training;
(b) Part III training is now also carried out in submarines in harbour;
(c) Part III training is now co-ordinated centrally and is given a higher priority in all submarines' programmes.

Bloodhound Missiles

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress on the replacement of Bloodhound missiles.

Mr. Aitken: Consideration is being given to procurement of future medium surface-to-air missile system although this will not be a direct replacement for Bloodhound.

Iserlohn Military Hospital

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent since 1986-87 to date on the extension and improvements to British military hospital Iserlohn; what was the original estimated cost in real terms; when the hospital will be closed; and what steps he is taking to recover the value of the improvements made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The expenditure to date on the major works services at BMH Iserlohn is £45·935 million against an original estimate of £34·635 million. On current plans the unit will cease functioning as a hospital on 31 March 1994 and the buildings will be handed over to the German authorities in November 1994.

Discussions are taking place with the German authorities concerning the future use of the property. The outcome of these discussions will decide whether there is a basis for a claim.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Aitken: The earliest year for which figures are available is 1982-83. Figures for the period 1982-83 to 1991-92 are as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	5·1
1983-84	6·3
1984-85	6·8
1985-86	6·7
1986-87	7·3
1987-88	7·0
1988-89	7·1
1989-90	8·0
1990-91	8·4
1991-92	9·1

The estimated expenditure figure for 1992-93 is £9·5 million. The figures provided include staff costs and expenditure on films, exhibitions, publications and equipment.

Management Consultants

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Aitken: Fees paid to management consultants engaged centrally by the Ministry of Defence for the years 1984-85 to 1991-92 are as follows:

Financial year	£ million
1984-85	0·604
1985-86	1·787
1986-87	6·203
1987-88	5·140
1988-89	3·109
1989-90	5·292
1990-91	3·935
1991-92	5·700

Figures for earlier years cannot be produced without disproportionate cost and effort.

Under the Department's devolved management strategy, expenditure on management consultancy is now the responsibility of individual management areas. Plans are therefore not held centrally for 1992-93, but provisional forecasts indicate expenditure of about £6·8 million.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Aitken: The opinion poll surveys conducted by, for, or on behalf of the Ministry of Defence since 1 November 1991 are as follows:

Service and subject
MOD—National Employers Liaison Committee Research Monitor
Navy—Exhibition Response Research
Army—Advertising Evaluation and Development
Black Strategy Development
Signal New Recruits
Creative Development
MORI Finalists Survey
Officers Strategic Research

The purpose of these surveys was to monitor the effectiveness of advertising and attitudes towards careers in the armed forces.

Dunera

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to publish the documents relating to the voyage of the Dunera.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have found no extant Ministry of Defence records relating to the voyage of the Dunera. The courts martial records of the British service men who were charged with offences against the passengers of that vessel were destroyed some years ago as they did not meet the criteria for permanent preservation. The Home Office has a small number of records concerning the Dunera. All are open to public examination, in class HO 215, at the Public Records Office. They include file No. 215/1, containing the Dunera passenger lists, which until very recently was closed.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown for (a) Rosyth dockyard, (b) Devonport dockyard, (c) Coulport RNAD, (d) HMS Defiance and (e) Clyde submarine base of individual radiation dose exposures for workers in the bands (i) 0 to 10, (ii) 10 to 15, (iii) 15 to 20, (iv) 20 to 30, (v) 30 to 40 and (vi) greater than 40 mSv for the years 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Aitken: Information on radiation doses in 1992 is not yet available. The tables provide information on doses for 1991 at the locations specified. It is possible to split the band 0-15 mSv only for those workers covered by the assessments of approved dosemeters issued by the Defence Radiological Protection Service (DRPS). At Rosyth and Devonport dockyards many personnel are protected by separate local dosimetry arrangements.

Table A—Annual individual radiation dose equivalents for all personnel at Rosyth dockyard—1991

0-15 mSv	1,182
15-20 mSv	0
20-30 mSv	0
30-40 mSv	0
More than 40 mSv	0

Of the 1,182 workers who received doses of 0-15 mSv, 430 can be identified as being in the band 0-10 mSv and 22 in the band 10-15 mSv.

Table B—Annual individual radiation dose equivalents for all personnel at Devonport dockyard—1991

More than 40 mSv	0

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown for (a) Aldermaston AWE, (b) Burghfield AWE and (c) Cardiff AWE of individual radiation dose exposures for workers in the bands (i) 0 to 10, (ii) 10 to 15, (iii) 15 to 20, (iv) 20 to 30, (v) 30 to 40 and (vi) greater than 40 mSv for the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Aitken: The individual annual radiation dose data for AWE Aldermaston (A), Burghfield (B) and Cardiff (C) for the years 1990 and 1991 are as follows:

Numbers of workers in dose bands

	AWE (A)	(B)	(C)
1990
0-10 mSv	3,388	182	136
10-15 mSv	4	0	0
30-40 mSv	0	0	0

Over 40 mSv	0	0	0

Annual dose data for the year 1992 are not yet available.

RNAD Trecwn

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part his Department is playing in the study into the feasibility of establishing a munitions decommissioning centre at RNAD Trecwn.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is investigating the possibility of alternative Ministry of Defence and other Government Department uses for the RNAD Trecwn site but our requirement for munitions disposal is small and would be best met by a storage site for which there is a continuing additional need. I am not aware of the existence of a feasibility study.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the current study by the National Radiological Protection Board in relation to veterans of British nuclear tests to be completed; if he intends to publish this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) on 22 May 1992, column 290.

IFF Technology

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Warrior vehicles hit by friendly fire from two American A-10 jets were fitted with IFF—identification friend-or-foe technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. During the Gulf conflict, a secure and effective electronic identification system did not exist. The board of inquiry into this tragic incident recommended that a study be initiated to identify a suitable air recognition system for future use. In pursuit of that recommendation, the Defence Research Agency is undertaking a research programme aimed at assessing short-term solutions as well as options for the longer term.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for updating and improving current IFF—identification friend-or-foe technology.

Mr. Aitken: The Government remain concerned about the inadequacies of existing IFF systems. We are currently engaged, in co-operation with France and Germany, in a programme of studies into the required characteristics of a next generation IFF system for aircraft. Close consultation is being maintained with Italy and with the United States Government, who have been reviewing their own future requirements following the cancellation of its IFF Mk XV programme in 1991. Firm decisions on the way ahead are not expected before 1993.

Separately, the Government are carrying out studies into possible methods of improving the identification of ground forces (battlefield IFF).

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for defence what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: There are currently 1,164 registered disabled people employed in the MOD. This represents 0·9 per cent. of the total workforce. In addition, there are a number of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register formally as disabled. The MOD takes very seriously its responsibilities as an equal opportunities employer, and has compiled a programme of action for people with disabilities, which is to be launched shortly.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the £2 million saving per year he estimates will be made to the defence budget when flying training ends at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is continuing to look for alternative uses for RAF Brawdy within his Department when flying training ends there.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Investigations have so far revealed no alternative defence uses for RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what grade of official has represented his Department at meetings of the task force on the effects of the closures of RAF Brawdy and RNAD Trecwn;

(2) what is the grade of the civil servant representing the MOD on the Secretary of State for Wales's Task Force for Pembrokeshire set up in connection with the ending of flight training at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD representation has been at grade 7 (principal) level, with the exception of one meeting at which, because of other commitments, representation was by an executive officer.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the position on the consumption of alcohol on royal naval nuclear submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current ports allocated to Z-berths for nuclear submarines; and if he has any plans to alter the list in the future.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Within the United Kingdom there are Z-berths, including buoys and anchorages, at the following locations:

Barrow-in-Furness, Barry, Broadford Bay, Brodick Bay, Campbeltown, Cardiff, Coulport, Dales Voe, Dalgety Bay, Devonport and Plymouth Sound, Faslane, the Firth of Forth, Glen Mallan, Holy Loch, Lamlash Bay, Lerwick, Liverpool, Loch Ewe, Loch Fyne, Loch Goil, Loch na Beiste, Loch Striven, Loch Torridon, Portland, Portree, Portsmouth, Raasay, Rosyth, Rothesay, Southampton, Spithead, Thurso Bay and Torbay.

In addition, we have decided to establish a Z-berth at Swansea. The operational requirements for Z-berths are under continuous review but there are no current plans to alter this list.

Defence Review

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implementation of the defence review.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have been restructuring our forces to ensure that, though smaller, they will be more flexible, more mobile and better-equipped than ever before. We will continue to keep the House fully informed of progress in implementing plans for Britain's defence for the 1990s.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the amount of chemical weaponry held by former Soviet Union countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The former Soviet chemical warfare stockpile, which the Russian authorities say is now held entirely within their territory, is the largest and most sophisticated in the world. We estimate that the stockpile is greater than the 50,000 tonnes of agent that the Soviet authorities claimed it to be. The chemical weapons convention in Geneva continues to make progress towards a global ban on these weapons.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Aitken: Government Departments, and their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. In such matters the MOD does not differentiate between large, medium or small business suppliers and normally expects to pay its bills within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice as required by the contract.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their subcontractors all my Department's contracts will contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its subcontractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the subcontractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Aitken: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. However, in the light of my hon. Friend's question, I will make sure that the appropriate senior officials in my Department receive a copy. I can assure my hon. Friend that my Department has a good record on the prompt payment of its due bills to all contractors, including small businesses.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many nuclear free-fall bombs have been withdrawn from service to date;

(2) how many nuclear free-fall bombs are currently deployed by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to specify publicly the size of our nuclear weapon holdings. The hon. Member will recall however that my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) announced on 14 October 1991, Official Report, column 58, that we should be making a substantial reduction in the numbers of our WE177 bombs in coming years. The process of withdrawing WE177 weapons from service in accordance with that announcement is under way.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent will be maintained by a combined force of Trident and Polaris submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Trident will enter service progressively from the mid-1990s. It is not our practice to disclose details of operational deployments and decommissioning programmes.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans his Department has to alter the level of warhead deployment for the United Kingdom's minimum strategic nuclear deterrent before the end of the century;

(2) if the criteria determining the level at which the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent is deployed will be different for Trident compared with Polaris.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It will remain the Government's policy to deploy the minimum number of warheads necessary to ensure credible and effective deterrence.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the implications for the continued credibility of the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent of the deployment of existing anti-ballistic missile systems around the world;

(2) what is his Department's assessment of the security implications for the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent of the acquisition by Russia of anti-ballistic missile technology and know-how from other states.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We remain satisfied with the continuing credibility and effectiveness of our strategic nuclear deterrent. The possibility of future developments in anti-ballistic missile defence, however, confirms that wisdom of replacing Polaris with Trident.

RAF Training

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons have been killed during RAF training over rural mid-Wales each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Aircraft type	Number of fatalities	Location
June 1987	Jaguar	1	Near Builth Wells, Powys
August 1987	Phantom	2	8 nm south of Aberystwyth
June 1989	Hawk/Hawk Mid-Air	1	Near Aberystwyth
August 1991	Jaguar/Civilian Cessna	2[1]	Carno, Powys

[1]Including civilian pilot of Cessna.

The RAF attaches the highest priority to flight safety in all its training activities.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the number of countries currently involved in the development of biological weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is assessed that about ten countries possess or seek to acquire a biological warfare capability. It is difficult to gauge exactly the number of countries that are involved because biological weapons can be developed and produced at civilian facilities.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested, in respect of centrally controlled expenditure, is as follows:

	(a) Television advertising	(b) Radio advertising	(c) Newspaper advertising	(d) Other promotional material	Total
1979-80	2·28	0·04	5·75	0·14	8·21
1980-81	0·54	0·17	6·10	0·85	7·66
1981-82	0·01	0·04	4·20	1·04	5·29
1982-83	0·01	0·07	3·90	1·03	5·01
1983-84	Nil	0·07	5·30	1·90	7·27
1984-85	0·49	0·02	6·86	1·50	8·87
1985-86	1·82	0·02	6·82	1·03	9·69
1986-87	0·73	0·22	8·07	1·17	10·19
1987-88	0·55	0·03	7·68	2·52	10·78

1990-91	2·88	0·22	9·21	8·62	20·93
1991-92	3·28	0·26	7·93	7·37	18·84
1992-93	2·15	0·01	7·20	1·88	11·24

Note: All figures are expressed in £ million.

Nuclear Testing

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will upport a comprehensive test ban treaty to end underground nuclear testing.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 12 May 1992 at col. 90.

Newtown Firing Range

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to upgrade the Newtown firing range to electronic target range standards.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Channel Islands

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the defence installation facilities paid for by the Channel Islands states Governments as their contribution to the cost of their defence by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Iraq

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any request for the use of British forces for mine clearance in liberated areas of Iraq has been made.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no requests from the Iraqi authorities for the assistance of British forces in clearing mines inside Iraq.

NATO Rapid Reaction Corps

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to seek alternative Army training grounds in eastern Europe for military manouevres for the NATO rapid reaction corps under British command.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently no plans for either ARRC units or British Forces to use training areas in eastern Europe.

HMS Turbulent

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the report into the fire on-board HMS Turbulent on 30 April is complete, if he will make that report available to the public;

(2) when he expects the investigation into the fire on board HMS Turbulent on 30 April to be completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The report on the causes of the fire on-board HMS Turbulent has been completed. It is not our practice to release internal reports of this nature but I can confirm that the fire was due to a material defect in a switchboard which has now been rectified.

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the tolls on the Severn bridge from its opening till the present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is as follows:

	Motor cycles	Cars	Small goods/ buses	Large goods/ buses
September 1966	1s.0d	2s.6d	2s.6d	2s.6d
February 1971	5p	12½p	12½p	12½p
March 1973	5p	12p	12p	12p
August 1979	10p	20p	20p	40p
June 1983	—	50p	50p	£1·00
December 1985[1]	—	20p	20p	40p
January 1987[2]	—	50p	50p	£1·00
December 1989	—	£1·00	£1·00	£2·00
April 1992	—	[3]£2·80	[3]£5·60	[3]£8·40

[1] Reduced to 1979 levels following High Court judgement.
[2] Reinstated toll levels following House of Lords ruling.
[3] One-way toll (westbound)—eastbound is free.

These toll charges reflect the cost of providing and maintaining the Severn bridge. The increases in April 1992 will additionally help to meet the cost of providing a second crossing, which is due to open in 1996.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Norris: My Department regularly commissions surveys. A list of all surveys is maintained, but it is not possible to identify easily from this list those surveys which include questions of opinion. The answer on 5 November 1991 to the hon. Member referred to 69 surveys of all types reported to the Department's survey control unit in 1991. A further 47 have been reported since and I am sending a list of these to the hon. Member.

Consultants Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: The latest figures for fees paid by the Department to management consultants are as follows:

1984-85	250,000
1985-86	272,000
1986-87	218,000
1987-88	371,000
1988-89	604,000
1989-90	734,000
1990-91	814,592
1991-92	[1]1,228,066
1992-93	[2]1,373,005

[1] Latest estimate.
[2] Budget.

This excludes fees for computing consultancies.

Information for earlier years could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when it is intended that the draft orders for the M6 to M56 section of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road be issued.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This summer.

M6, Corley Moor

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive a formal application from British Coal for an extra junction on the M6 near Corley Moor to the west of the Corley service station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It would be for Warwickshire county council as highway authority for local roads to decide to request the Department to include in its programme an extra junction on the M6 near Corley Moor.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the public consultation to take place in respect of (a) the M56 to A580 and (b) the A580 to M66 sections of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I expect public consultation on the M56 to M62 section of the Greater Manchester northern relief road to start later this year. I cannot yet give a date for consultation on the section between the M62 and M66.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private and public sector properties are currently vacant in the city of Liverpool; what incentives he will provide to Liverpool city council to introduce homesteading schemes; what penalties he will impose on private and public sector landlords who fail to let properties; what is the estimated annual rent and community charge lost on empty private and public sector properties (a) throughout the United Kingdom and (b) in Liverpool; if he will meet leaders of Liverpool city council to discuss a plan of action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: At 1 April 1991, the number of vacant properties in Liverpool was 5,733 local authority, 843 housing association and 7,908 privately owned.

As far as local authority stock is concerned, the housing subsidy rules penalise those councils that have more than 2 per cent. of their stock empty and reward those that do better. To further encourage best use of housing resources the Department will be introducing a pilot scheme to promote homesteading of local authority stock, linked with the estate action programme. For private homes, we do not believe that property owners should be forced to let accommodation against their will, but our policies are geared to creating the conditions to encourage landlords to let their properties.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 221, by the Minister for Energy, what proposals he has for encouragement of combined heat and power schemes in the renewables sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Energy Efficiency Office—EEO—through its best practice programme, continues to promote the wider application of combined heat and power—CHP—schemes in all appropriate sectors of the United Kingdom economy regardless of the fuel used.

Where a CHP plant uses a fuel such as waste it may also benefit from the Government's programme to promote the development of renewable energy sources. This programme is run by the Department of Trade and Industry, which works in close collaboration with the EEO on CHP schemes using alternative fuels.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is his intention that local authorities should have a veto on applications for opencast mining.

Mr. Baldry: No. It is for the mineral planning authority as the elected representatives of the local community in the first instance to decide in any particular case whether planning permission should be granted having regard to all the material considerations, including the potential impact of the development on the environment and local residents. However, it is a fundamental of the land use planning system that the applicant has the right of appeal to the Secretary of State against a mineral planning authority's refusal of an application.

Environment Programme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the environmental action programme 1993-2000 launched by Commissioner Ripa di Meana on 18 March.

Mr. Maclean: The Government played a full part in discussions leading to the adoption, at the Environment Council on 26 May, of preliminary conclusions concerning the environmental action programme "Towards Sustainability". The Council welcomed the presentation by the European Commission of the programme and undertook to ensure that the programme will be discussed so that it can become operative by 1 January 1993 following the adoption of a resolution by the Council. Preparation of the resolution will fall to the United Kingdom presidency of the Council.

The Government have set out their initial views on the programme in an explanatory memorandum which will be presented to the Select Committee on European Legislation when the Committee is reconstituted. Copies of the explanatory memorandum have been placed in the Library of the House.

Planning Controls

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action is being taken following the recommendation by the House of Commons Environment Committee concerning the harmonisation of planning control above and below low watermark;

(2) if he will consider extending local authority planning control to the 12-nautical mile limit of territorial waters.

Mr. Baldry: In its second report of last Session, the Environment Select Committee made several recommendations on the issue of harmonising landward planning control and seaward regulations as far as the 12-nautical mile limit of territorial waters. We are considering the report and will respond in due course.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Contaminated Land Registry with particular reference to its timing, its implications on planning and liabilities on owners of land on the register.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 14 May, at column 198.

Environment Council

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 26 May.

Mr. Howard: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside and I represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council on 26 May.

The Council approved a new directive on air pollution by ozone. The directive requires the monitoring of atmospheric concentrations of ozone throughout the Community on a consistent basis; the sharing of selected monitoring information between member states and the Commission; and the issuing of information and of precautionary health warnings to the public in the event of ozone concentrations exceeding specific thresholds. It also requires the Commission, four years after entry into force of the directive, to put a report to the Council on the monitoring data collected by member states, with proposals on the control of air pollition by ozone.

The Council adopted conclusions on the framework convention on climate change and agreed that the convention constituted a significant first step in tackling this global problem. They urged all countries to sign the convention during the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development and to ratify it as soon as possible, and agreed that the Community should also sign it. The Council also supported the continuation of the climate change negotiations to begin in autumn 1992 and stressed the readiness of the Community to contribute actively to this work.

The Commission gave a brief presentation on the state of their preparations to present to the Council proposals for a strategy for the reduction of carbon dioxide emissions, which would include proposals for a carbon/energy tax.

In advance of UNCED, the Council adopted preliminary conclusions welcoming the presentation by the Commission of the fifth environmental action programme, entitled "Towards Sustainability". It noted the contents of the programme and undertook to accord the highest priority to consideration of the programme in the light of UNCED and the opinions of the European Parliament and the economic and social committee, so that, following the adoption of a resolution by the Council, the programme can become operative by 1 January 1993.

The Council discussed informally the state of preparations for UNCED.

The Council discussed at length a draft Council regulation on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community. The regulation is intended to update existing Community legislation on the control of transboundary movements of waste and to enable member states to ratify the United Nations Environment Programme convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. Much progress was made towards the achievement of a common position, but owing to continuing differences of view on the question of national self-sufficiency in the disposal of waste, the Council was unable to reach agreement on this occasion.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue guidance to the local government commission and announce its work programme.

Mr. Howard: I have today issued to the local authority associations and other organisations with an interest the policy guidance I intend to issue to the new local government commission. It takes account of the comments we received on the draft guidance issued last November. I have also today issued draft procedure guidance for the local government commission. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library of the House and additional copies are available in the Vote Office.

I intend to direct the local government commission to undertake a rolling programme of reviews of the shire counties of England, area by area. Review will be carried out in five tranches. The areas to be covered in each tranche are:

First
Avon
Gloucestershire
Somerset
Cleveland
Durham
Derbyshire
Humberside
Lincolnshire
North Yorkshire
Isle of Wight

Second Cambridgeshire
Cumbria
Lancashire
Devon
Hampshire
Leicestershire
Nottinghamshire
Staffordshire

Third
Bedfordshire
Berkshire
Oxfordshire
Buckinghamshire
Cheshire
East Sussex
West Sussex
Kent
Northamptonshire

Fourth
Dorset
Essex
Hereford and Worcester
Norfolk
Suffolk
Wiltshire

Fifth
Cornwall
Hertfordshire
Northumberland
Shropshire
Surrey
Warwickshire

This represents a balanced and manageable programme for the commission and gives priority to those areas where there is a history of dissatisfaction with the existing local government structure. I expect structural changes following the commission's reviews to take effect between 1994 and 1998.

Contingencies Fund

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to draw advances from the Contingencies Fund in 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: Yes. In February my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that the Government would be providing £55 million of Government support towards Manchester's bid to host the 2000 Olympic games. Most of this funding will be used to provide sports facilities, but £2 million is to be used to help the Manchester Olympics bid committee fund the bid itself. Funding of the work on the bid will form a new service and parliamentary approval to it will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the urban aid and derelict land reclamation vote—class VIII, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £900,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

In addition, I shall be taking a further advance from the Contingencies Fund to meet the immediate administration and project development costs of the Birmingham Heartlands urban development corporation. Parliament approved the statutory order establishing this corporation on 10 March 1992 and Parliament's approval of the associated new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate also for the urban aid and derelict land reclamation vote—class VIII, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £300,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Building Regulations

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any changes to the Building Regulations 1991, or the guidance in the associated draft approved documents, which came into force on 1 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Regulations 1991 were laid before Parliament on 10 December 1991 and, subject to certain transitional provisions, came into force on 1 June 1992.

The main technical changes brought about by the regulations relate to regulation 7 (materials and workmanship), part A (structure), part B (fire safety), part C (site preparation and resistance to moisture), part E (resistance to the passage of sound), part G (hygiene), part K (stairs, ramps and guards) and part M (access and facilities for disabled people) and a new part N (glazing —materials and protection).

In conjunction with the coming into effect of the new regulations, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has approved, for the purpose of giving practical guidance on ways of meeting the amended technical requirements of the regulations, the "approved documents" which were also published in December. To bring the statutory guidance fully up to date, HMSO has published an amendments document—"The Building Regulations 1991: Amendments 1992"—which contains corrections, clarifications and revisions to both the new approved documents and those existing editions which will remain approved for the purposes of the 1991 regulations —parts 3 (toxic substances), F (ventilation), H (drainage and waste disposal), J (heat producing applications) and L (conservation of fuel and power). A copy of the amendments document will be placed in the Library of the House.

The new statutory guidance on the requirements for means of escape in case of fire—approved document B (fire safety)—will now have the practical effect of requiring that smoke detectors are fitted in all new and converted dwellings. As a result of this change, the provisions of the Smoke Detectors Act 1991 are unnecessary, and we have therefore decided, on the advice of the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, not to bring that Act into force.

The Building Regulations (Amendment) Regulations, which were laid before Parliament on 28 May, make a minor preocedural amendment to regulation 13 of the Building Regulations 1991, which is necessary to remove an unnecessary administrative burden on builders and developers that was inadvertently introduced in those regulations. The amendment ensures that extra copies of fire safety plans are not required to be deposited where the work relates to a dwelling-house or flat, and comes into effect on 26 June 1992.

The Department has issued a joint circular with the Welsh Office—DOE circular 13/92, Welsh Office circular 29/92—to all building control authorities in England and Wales, and approved inspectors, giving general guidance on the main procedural changes which will arise on the coming into effect of the new regulations, and other administrative matters arising as a consequence. The circular also contains details of all the approved documents. A copy of the circular has been placed in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that all lists of candidates for public appointments contain equal numbers of men and women.

The Prime Minister: All appointments to public bodies are made on the basis of aptitude and merit. It is Government policy for all shortlists prepared for Ministers' consideration to include the names of women or for good reasons to be given for the absence of such names.

Commercial Whaling

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he will take to ensure that there is a permanent ban on all commercial whaling in United Kingdom and EC waters.

The Prime Minister: Whaling within United Kingdom fishery limits is already banned and the sale and purchase of whale products by EC member states are prohibited through the Community implementation of the convention on international trade in endangered species.

Ministerial Committee on the Environment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister how often the ministerial committee on the environment has met since 10 April; when the next meeting is planned; what will be on the agenda of the next meeting; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on 2 June, at column 394.

Security Files

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now make it his policy to disclose how many files on (a) individuals and (b) organisations are kept by (i) the Security Service and (ii) the Secret Intelligence Service; what is his policy on the destruction of files held by these services; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the conclusions of the Security Service Commissioner who said in his report for 1991 that he found the Security Service's general policy on retention of records acceptable.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department will be responsible for overseeing the application of nuclear safeguards and the transmission of safeguards data to the Euratom and International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards directorates on United Kingdom facilities following the closure of the Department of Energy.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to raise the issue of nuclear warhead testing and the prospects for a global halt during his next meeting with President Bush.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 12 May, at column 90.

Bohemian Wood Carvings

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his discussions in Prague with President Havel, in relation to the theft of Bohemian ecclesiastical wood carvings, and their subsequent sale in the West.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I raised this issue with a senior colleague of President Havel. I have instructed our ambassador to follow up that discussion in greater detail.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give separate figures for the spending by the Cabinet Office on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The information requested is not available for the years before 1987-88. For the years from 1987-88 the information is as follows:

Year	Television £	Radio £	Newspaper £	Other £
1987-88	Nil	Nil	Nil	19,306
1988-89	Nil	Nil	Nil	9,500
1989-90	Nil	Nil	Nil	14,833
1990-91	Nil	Nil	Nil	876
[1]1991-92	Nil	Nil	Nil	10,478
[1]1992-93	Nil	Nil	Nil	1,000

[1] Estimated figures.

In addition, there was estimated expenditure in 1991-92 on advertising associated with the citizens charter of £811,911 on newspaper advertising and £202,134 on other advertising. Similar expenditure in 1992-93 is provisionally estimated at £165,000 on television advertising, £495,000 on newspaper advertising and £621,000 on other advertising.

HOME DEPARTMENT

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received regarding funding and staffing of UKIAS; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he proposes to make additional financial resources available to UKIAS.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 18 May 1992 at column 10.

Replica Firearms

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent advice he has received from the Firearms Consultative Committee concerning replica firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Firearms Consultative Committee advised the then Home Secretary that neither a ban nor licensing controls on replica firearms would be either feasible or effective. The committee recommended extending the range of offences which apply to the misuse of replicas. This recommendation is under consideration with the prosecuting authorities and the police service. The committee also recommended that warning labels about the heavy penalties which apply to misuse should be incorporated on the packaging of imitation firearms. Consultations have been held with the trade whose views are being carefully considered.

Dispersal Prisons

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review his policy of reducing the number of dispersal prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My predecessor announced in 1989 that the number of disperal prisons would be reduced from eight to six. There are at present no plans to vary this number.

Police Incidents

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing the number of incidents recorded (a) per uniformed officer and (b) per head of population in each police authority area in Britain over the last five years including 1991-92 and an index of the increase in each area with year one as the base.

Mr. Jack: The available information relates to the number of offences recorded by the police per officer and per 100,000 population for the years 1987 to 1991 and is contained in the tables.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firearms and shotgun certificates have been issued on Merseyside in each of the years 1986 to 1991; and what information he has about the numbers of firearms and shotguns stolen in the county during the same period.

Mr. Jack: The number of applications for new firearm and shotgun certificates granted and the number of certificates renewed by the Merseyside police force in each year from 1986 to 1990, are shown in tables 2 and 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin Nos. 2/88, 33/88, 18/89, 26/90 and 23/91. Copies of these bulletins are in the Library.

The total number of offences of burglary and theft recorded by Merseyside police force in which one or more firearms were reported as stolen and the number of these in which the principal weapon stolen was a shotgun is shown in the table for each year between 1986 and 1990.

Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the desirability of amending the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929 and the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 in the light of the recent acquittal in the case involving the death of a 36-week unborn child.

Mr. Jack: I understand that the acquittal referred to by the hon. Member concerned a charge of manslaughter, of which a person may be convicted if it can be proved that the victim was born alive and subsequently died as the result of injuries received whilst in the womb. Neither the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929, which makes it an offence intentionally to destroy the life of an unborn child capable of being born alive, nor the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, which disapplied the 1929 Act from abortions carried out in accordance with the conditions of the Abortion Act 1967, is therefore directly relevant to this case.

Criminal Appeals

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were referred to the Court of Appeal criminal division on a point of law under section 17(1) of the Criminal Appeals Act 1968 by his predecessors in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jack: Two: one in 1990 and one in 1992.

Visas

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the requirement for visas for Polish nationals who visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since the beginning of last year, about 160 representations have been received from right hon. and hon. Members and about 75 letters from members of the public.

After a further review of the need for a visa requirement for Polish nationals, the Prime Minister decided to lift it with effect from 1 July.

The position will be reviewed after two years in the light of experience of the effects of this change.

Bail Hostels

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels in England and Wales have been sited in villages.

Mr. Jack: There are currently 28 bail and 81 probation/bail hostels in England and Wales. Of these, three bail and 12 probation/bail hostels are located in smaller communities outside urban areas.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will set out the statutory procedures, step by step, which are required prior to a decision for siting a bail hostel being made.

Mr. Jack: Hostels are established under powers given by section 49 of the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973. The procedure is for the relevant area probation or voluntary management committee to decide upon the exact location of a hostel and to obtain the necessary planning consent locally.

Apart from obtaining planning permission from the relevant planning authority, there are no statutory procedures laid down for the siting of bail hostels.

The Home Office is now producing guidance on developing new hostels which will include matters concerning local consultation when a particular site is being considered. In future probation and voluntary committees will have to follow this guidance.

John Kamara

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the case of John Kamara, details of whom have been sent to him by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside.

Mr. Jack: Representations about Mr. Kamara's case have been considered in the light of inquiries made, but we have concluded that the information currently available does not provide sufficient grounds to justify any intervention in this conviction.

I have written to the hon. Member in more detail about the case.

Offensive Weapons

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the criminal law relating to the possession or use of offensive weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has no plans to amend the law in this area.

Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 makes it an offence in England and Wales to possess in public a bladed or sharply pointed article with the onus on the carrier to show that he has good reason. This measure supplemented the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 which makes it an offence for a person to have an offensive weapon in a public place without reasonable excuse or lawful authority.

The courts have available and use severe penalties to deal with offenders whose crimes involve the use of offensive weapons. The Criminal Justice Act 1991 will enhance the power of the courts to protect the public from serious harm from a violent offender.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Irish Whiskey

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the revenues which have accrued to the Exchequer through domestic sales of Irish whiskey in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The only available information is in respect of VAT and excise duty accruing from domestic sales of all whisky produced in the United Kingdom for which I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 20 May 1992, at column 181.

Gender Impact Statements

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to include a gender impact statement as an integral part of future Budget and Financial Statements.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Banks

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will encourage British banks to compete within the EC.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom has been in the forefront of those arguing in Brussels for measures that will create a single market in banking in the EC. The second banking directive, together with a series of directives harmonising prudential rules across the EC, will come into force in January 1993. This will result in the removal of barriers to cross-border expansion and improved competitive opportunities for British banks wishing to do business throughout the Community.

Money Laundering

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps have been taken to implement the EC money laundering directive.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has issued a consultation paper on the implementation of this directive. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

European Single Market

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the method of calculating and presenting Britain's balance of payments figures will be altered after the establishment of the European single market in January 1993.

Mr. Nelson: Yes. The changes stem from the abolition of most Customs controls on intra-Community trade. Customs declarations, the current source of the statistics of visible trade, will no longer be available. Instead, a new system of monthly returns, linked to VAT returns, has been devised. Known as Intrastat, it is governed by Council regulation (EEC) No. 3330/91 of 7 November 1991. Further details have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

The presentation of the monthly visible trade statistics will be affected. There will be a transitional period before the new system becomes fully established, affecting all member states to a greater or lesser extent depending on the speed and accuracy with which traders supply data. In United Kingdom, complete visible trade figures and, hence, the current account balance for the early months of 1993 are unlikely to be published before the middle of the year, although extra-EC trade statistics will continue to be made available in line with the current timetable. Announcements on the timing and format of the publications will be made nearer the time.

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes he expects in the role and duties of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise after the establishment of a European single market in January 1993.

Sir John Cope: With the creation of the single market, fiscal frontiers between member states will disappear. As from 1 January 1993, there will be no routine or systematic customs formalities and goods will move freely across internal EC frontiers. The collection of VAT, excise duty and statistics on intra-EC trade at the frontier will be replaced by arrangements based on the provision of periodic returns by companies controlled at their own premises and linked to the domestic VAT and excise systems. As a result there will be a major shift of resource and effort from frontier to inland locations.

There will be no restrictions on tax and duty-paid goods purchased for personal use in the single market. The use of the red and green channels will also cease. Although duty-free allowances will continue for the time being, control will be exercised on the vendor rather than passengers at the point of entry into the United Kingdom.

Customs currently operate a wide range of controls at the frontier which are carried out on behalf of other Government Departments, for example health checks on intra-EC traffic in animals and plants. The single market will mean that routine regulatory controls of this kind at internal EC borders will cease. The restrictions that remain will be controlled inland, with any documentary checks divorced from the physical movement of the goods.

However, anti-smuggling spot checks will continue particularly to combat illicit drug trafficking in respect of traffic from inside as well as outside the EC after 1 January 1993. Customs are creating a more flexible, mobile, better targeted and highly selective system of checks for this purpose, operating on the basis of risk assessment, intelligence and profiling which will result in far less obtrusive controls. Customs activity at the frontier will continue to form part of a national integrated law enforcement effort against illicit goods.

European Co-operative Statute

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what documents, in addition to the formal draft statute, he will base his formal consultation exercise in regard to the draft European co-operative statute; and if he will place copies of all such documents and any circulars on the topic in the Library.

Mr. Nelson: The combined consultative document will be based on all three draft "social economy" statutes, along with the accompanying employee participation directives. In drafting this consultative document, due notice will be taken of the consultation exercise carried out by the DTI in January 1992, in respect of the European company statute, on which many of the provisions of the "social economy" statutes are based. Copies of the draft statutes and directives are already in the Library and a copy of the consultative document will be placed there in due course.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Bank of England will respond to the second report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee of Session 1991-92, "Banking Supervision and BCCI: The Role of Local Authorities and Money Brokers".

Mr. Nelson: I understand that the Bank of England has now responded to the second report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee in Session 1991-92, "Banking Supervision and BCCI: The Role of Local Authorities and Money Brokers". A copy of this response has been placed in the Library, together with the revised edition of the London code of conduct for principals and broking firms in the wholesale markets, which was issued by the bank on 29 May.

Rouble

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what conditionality has been applied over the funding of a stabilisation fund for the Russian rouble; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the communiqués issued by the G7 and G10 on 26 and 27 April 1992 respectively, which are being placed in the Library of the House.

At meetings in Washington on 26 and 27 April, the G7 and G10 supported the intention to establish a rouble stabilisation fund provided appropriate conditions were met. The fund, which would operate in conjunction with a comprehensive IMF programme, would be intended to help stabilise the rouble, facilitate convertibility of the currency, and promote confidence in the Russian reform effort.

The exact conditions that will need to be satisfied before funding is made available for a stabilisation fund will be determined by the IMF and G10 in consultation with the Russian authorities. These conditions will include the implementation of an agreed IMF programme. It is clear that a stabilisation fund would be effective only once a significant tightening of monetary policies had taken place, an appropriate exchange rate regime had, in the opinion of the IMF, been established, and an effective agreement had been reached on the management of monetary policy across the rouble area.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent the individual policies of economic management pursued by each of the CIS republics will be able to influence the success of a rouble stabilisation fund for Russia.

Mr. Nelson: A rouble stabilisation fund could be successful only once effective agreements had been reached on the management of monetary policy across the rouble area. Before a rouble stabilisation fund is put in place the IMF will need to satisfy itself that appropriately tight monetary policies are being followed in Russia and all other states which use the rouble.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if moneys being allocated for a rouble stabilisation fund, if drawn on, will be subject to repayment by any of those countries that comprise the Commonwealth of Independent States.

Mr. Nelson: G10 Finance Ministers, meeting in Washington on 27 April, agreed that a rouble stabilisation fund could be financed by the IMF which would provide Russia with enhanced access to its resources, which in turn would be replenished through lending to the IMF by participating countries under the general arrangements to borrow—GAB. Such a stabilisation fund would be put in place only if Russia agreed a programme with the IMF. National contributions to the IMF under the GAB would be matched by the acquisition of claims on the IMF. All funds made available by the IMF to Russia, either through an IMF standby arrangement or a rouble stabilisation fund, would be fully repaid in accordance with criteria established by the IMF.

Commonwealth of Independent States

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the nature of the G7 package of support for the Commonwealth of Independent States as a whole and each of its constituent republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the communiqués issued by the G7 and G10 on 26 and 27 April 1992 respectively, which are being placed in the Library of the House.

The G7 has expressed its commitment to support Russia's reform effort during the difficult period of transition by providing the recently announced $24 billion multilateral financial assistance package within the context of an agreed IMF programme. To this end, the G7 is prepared to provide up to $18 billion through substantial bilateral assistance, together with other countries, and through supporting significant financial resources from the international financial institutions. In addition, the G10 has supported the intention to establish a $6 billion rouble stabilisation fund.

No similar package has been announced for the other states of the former Soviet Union.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The expenditure by Her Majesty's Treasury—excluding the BT share offer—on advertising and other promotional material is as follows.

The expenditure for 1988-89 was £49,310, that for 1989-90 was £52,486, that for 1990-91 £43,581 and that for 1991-92 was £104,602—none of which was on television or radio. The estimate for 1992-93 is £72,500. Comparable figures for earlier years are unavailable because of machinery of government changes and could only be given at disproportionate cost.

BT share offer advertising costs were £20,000,000 for 1991-92.

Consultants' Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The expenditure by Her Majesty's Treasury, excluding the BT share offer, on fees for management consultants is as follows:

The expenditure for 1990-91 was £2,715,831, that for 1991-92 was £3,203,727 and estimate for 1992-93 is £3,697,304. For figures for earlier years I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 1 May 1991, at column 209.

The cost of advisers for the BT share offer was given in the answer of 5 March, at column 244.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The following public opinion surveys have been carried out on behalf of the Treasury since 1 November:

January—February NOP Share Ownership Survey.

The following surveys were also carried out on behalf of the Treasury but in relation to the BT share offer:

Market research into public awareness of the BT Share Offer.

Share information office registrants Survey.

Capital Adequacy Directive

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress was made at ECOFIN on 19 May with discussions on the draft capital adequacy directive; and when he expects the directive next to be discussed and a common position to be reached.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I refer my hon. Friend to the report by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the ECOFIN on 19 May, at columns 279-82. The next meeting of the ECOFIN takes place on 9 June when the CAD is likely to be discussed further.

HEALTH

Tattoo Removal

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to public funds for a tattoo to be removed.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The cost will vary according to such factors as the size and type of tattoo to be removed.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tattoos have been removed under the national health service for each of the most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue advice to tattooists on the advice to give potential customers about the ease with which tattoos can be removed.

Mr. Sackville: The decision to have a tattoo is a matter for individual freedom of choice. We would expect that tattooists inform customers of the ease of removal as part of normal good practice. The Department has issued model byelaws which enable local authorities to satisfy themselves that any premises offering skin piercing procedures are safe.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each health authority in England and Wales the number of patients waiting for operations; and of those how many are waiting for the removal of tattoos.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional figures for the number of patients waiting in England at 31 March 1992, are given in the table. Waiting time information on those waiting for tattoo removal, as with other specific conditions, is not collected centrally. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Rabies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of state for Health what information she has about the number of emergency vaccinations for suspected rabies in each country of the EC in 1991; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The latest figures available for Europe are for 1988 and contained in the World Health Organisation's "World Survey of Rabies 24", a copy of which is in the Library. Figures for England and Wales for 1990 show that 598 people received emergency courses of rabies vaccine.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Marginal Tax Rates

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate how many people will face marginal tax rates above 50 per cent. as a result of the introduction of the council tax; and if he will break this down into those with families and children and those without.

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to provide estimates of marginal deduction rates for 1993-94 as council tax levels have yet to be set. However, an estimated 395,000 heads of benefit units working more than 24 hours a week and receiving income-related benefits, would face marginal deduction rates of above 50 per cent. had the council tax replaced the community charge in 1991-92. Of this total, 325,000 would head families with children.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1987 and 1988 Family Expenditure Surveys at 1991-92 prices and benefit levels: estimates not comparable with those published in the Departmental Report (Cm 1914), which are based on Family Expenditure Surveys for 1986, 1987 and 1988.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Television Sets

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of (a) imports and (b) exports of television sets in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: In 1991, United Kingdom exports of television sets amounted to £685·4 million, compared with imports of £245·1 million.

Beer and Cider

Mr. Wallace: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the proposed implementation of section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985 in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The President of the Board of Trade has received only three letters about section 43 of the Weights and Measures Act 1985, none of which relate specifically to Scotland. The Government have considered these representations and have concluded that the section should be brought into force on 1 April 1994 in accordance with the terms of the order made on 5 March.

Securities and Investments Board

Mr. Harris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has received a report from the Securities and Investments Board on the exercise of its functions under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A copy of the board's report, made in accordance with s117 of the Act, was laid before Parliament today. The report covers the period from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

Markham Gas Field

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what stage negotiations have reached with the Netherlands Government on the transboundary Markham gas field.

Mr. Eggar: I am pleased to be able to inform the House that negotiation of a treaty with the Netherlands Government covering the exploitation of the Markham gas field has been concluded and that the treaty was signed in The Hague on 26 May by the British ambassador to the Netherlands Sir Michael Jenkins KCMG and by the Netherlands Minister of Economic Affairs Dr. J. E. Andriessen. The treaty, which is the United Kingdom's fourth transboundary field treaty although the first with the Netherlands, will enable the field to be developed as an integrated unit. It provides for co-operation between the two Governments on matters like safety, inspection, measurement, appointment of a single operator, approval of the field's development plan, abandonment, exchange of information and for the determination and apportionment of reserves. The treaty will in due course be laid before the House. In the meantime I will place a copy of the treaty in the Library of the House.

Director General of Fair Trading

Mr. Spring: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1990.

Mr. Leigh: The 18th annual report by the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1991 to 31 December 1991. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

South Africa

Mr. Hayes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will report on how British companies have complied with the European Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the 12-month period to 30 June 1991.

Mr. Heseltine: By 28 February 1992, a total of 101 companies had submitted reports to the DTI under the code of conduct. Copies of the reports and of the Department's analysis and summary have, as in previous years, been placed in the Library of each House. These documents may also be inspected at the Department's export market information centre, at the British embassy in Pretoria, at the British consulate-general in Johannesburg, and at the British consulates in Cape Town and Durban.

The analysis and summary is the sixth since the adoption of the revised code of conduct by EC Foreign Ministers in November 1985. Reports were received from all British companies, except two, whose interests are known or believed to warrant a full report under the code. The two companies not reporting were reminded of the existence of the code, and of the importance the Government attach to it.

The reporting period under review has seen a decrease in the number of black employees of British subsidiaries being paid below the code's recommended minimum level. Companies' reports indicated that over 98 per cent. of employees were paid above this level.

Companies' reports indicated that the level of their involvement with trades unions representing black workers increased, with the majority of companies reporting formal involvement with the trades unions. Many companies have taken steps to alleviate the particular hardships experienced by their migrant workers.

As in previous years, all companies provide on-the-job training and many provided additional training facilities. Companies continued to report impressive levels of involvement in projects benefiting not only their employees and their families but also the wider communities from which their work forces were drawn. Companies also continued to encourage the growth of black business.

The period covered by the report has been a time of rapid political change in South Africa. But, these encouraging developments have taken place against a backdrop of economic recession. Unemployment has continued to increase. This illustrates the pressing need to restore growth to the South African economy, so that all sides there may show their supporters that peaceful reform brings concrete benefits.

The Government are once more grateful to companies for their continued co-operation in providing reports, and urges them to maintain this performance and to comply fully with the code.

Energy Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on issues discussed and decisions taken at the European Energy Council meeting on 21 May.

Mr. Eggar: I attended the Council.

The main item on the agenda was the Commission's proposal, in continuation of its internal energy market programme, for two directives on the liberalisation of the electricity and gas markets. Those measures have the full support of the United Kingdom, which regards the completion of the internal energy market as a high priority. Some other member states do not support the Commission's proposals. No conclusionis were agreed following the Council discussion and the draft directives will go forward for further negotiation.

The Council adopted the directive on hot water boilers and reached a common position on the proposal for a directive on energy consumption labelling of domestic appliances, both of which come under the SAVE initiative on energy efficiency. The Commission outlined a proposal for a further SAVE directive, which would require member states to take action on building certification, heat metering, third party financing, buildings insulation, inspection of heating equipment, inspection of vehicles, and energy audits. The Commission related that proposal and other programmes, THERMIE and ALTENER, to stabilisation of CO_2 emissions and announced its intention to propose a CO_2/energy tax soon.

A mandate for the Commisson to open negotiations for Community accession to the IEA was deferred pending detailed examination of the proposed directive on oil crisis measures. The Commission presented a communication on oil markets and the refining industry and also a proposal for a directive on the conditions for granting and exercising authorisation for the exploration and production of hydrocarbons.

Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to implement the Competition and Service (Utilities) Act 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that I made a commencement order on 29 May which will bring into force the substantive sections of the Act. Section 37 was brought into force on 30 May. This is an enabling power for the Secretary of State to reduce—by order—the gas monopoly threshold.

On 1 July, the sections of the Act will come into force to provide the utility regulators with statutory powers to set and monitor standards for the utility companies, and to facilitate greater competition in the provision of water and sewerage services. Changes to the water mergers regime will ensure that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission can take into account the number of companies in separate ownership in their consideration of all mergers of water enterprises referred to them.

At the same time, there will come into force the sections granting the Secretary of State powers to make orders designating the telecommunication operators to which the Act will apply, and to make regulations to enable the Director General of Telecommunications to resolve telecoms billing disputes.

The sections of the Act giving the utility regulators power to resolve disputes between customers and the utilities will come into force on 1 September. The regulators will use the period before then to set up the necessary procedures.

Copies of the order have been placed in the Library of the House.

Director General of Telecommunications

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the successor to Sir Bryan Carsberg as Director General of Telecommunications.

Mr. Heseltine: I have appointed Mr. W. R. B. Wigglesworth as acting Director General of Telecommunications at the Office of Telecommunications with effect from 13 June 1992. The general election made it necessary to make an interim appointment. It has not proved possible to complete the process of appointing a long-term successor to Sir Bryan Carsberg before he moves to the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Wigglesworth has done an excellent job as deputy director and has carried out the duties of director in Sir Bryan's absences. I have complete confidence that he will carry out those responsibilities equally effectively until a long-term successor is found. Work on that is well in hand.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual provision or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their sub-contractors, all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub-contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the sub-contractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

Labelling and Packaging

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department has been invited to participate in (a) the conference on the practical implications of the New European Commission eco-labelling scheme, to be held in London on 18 June and (b) the conference on packaging and the environment and the implications for the British Retail Consortium, to be held in London on 15 June.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 June 1992]: My Department is in contact with the organisers of these conferences. Speakers at the conferences will include experts who have been advising and assisting my Department on the development of the EC eco-labelling scheme. Dr. Elizabeth Nelson, the recently appointed chairman of the non-departmental public body which is being established by my Department and the Department of the Environment to administer the eco-labelling scheme in the United Kingdom will address the conference on 18 June. A member of the National Advisory Group on Eco-labelling—NAGEL—will also address the Conference. Participants in the British Retail Consortium conference on 15 June will include a member of NAGEL and an official of the Department of the Environment.

Life Cycle Analysis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Ministers or officials have been invited to participate in or contribute to the conference on the use of life cycle analysis as a cost-effective management tool, to be held in London on 16 June.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 June 1992]: A deputy director of my Department's environment unit will attend the conference and give a presentation on the use of life-cycle analysis within the EC eco-labelling scheme.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ban the import of spent nuclear fuel into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 2 June 1992]: No.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cost Limits

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the 1992-93 running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departments.

Mr. Mates: The running cost limit for 1992-93 for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland departments is £712·3 million. Details of the provision for individual Northern Ireland departments are set out in the Northern Ireland estimates which were laid before the House on 2 June.

EDUCATION

Religious Advisers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will list the names and religious denomination of those outside his Department who advise him on religious matters on an occasional or standing basis; and whether he intends appointing any additional special advisers.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no such religious advisers, but he greatly values his contacts with religious leaders whom he and his ministerial colleagues see from time to time.

Student Support

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information the Government will provide about support for students for the coming year.

Mr. Forman: We have today published the 1992-93 edition of our guide "Student Grants and Loans". Secondary schools and colleges in England and Wales will receive copies; so will higher education institutions throughout the United Kingdom. Further copies are available on request. We have also placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

This guide contains good news for students. It shows the effect of the 4·5 per cent. increase in average resources that we are providing this autumn. Full year support from grant and loan will then be nearly 40 per cent. higher than the grant in 1989-90.

The guide gives students the facts about grants and loans in plain English. The citizens charter says that public services should publish simple and accurate information. Record numbers of students are entering higher education. They need to know what financial support they can get and how to apply for it. I am delighted that the guide bears the crystal mark of the Plain English Campaign.

Voluntary-Aided Schools

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to accept applications for voluntary-aided status from Muslim schools on the same criteria as applications from Anglican, Catholic and Jewish schools.

Mr. Forth: It has always been my right hon. Friend's policy to consider each proposal for voluntary-aided status, put forward by any persons or voluntary body of any religious persuasion, on its individual merits.

Lip Reading

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to ensure that lip-reading classes are available as a right to all who need them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Education Act 1981 places the responsibility for making appropriate educational provision for children with special educational needs on each local education authority. It is not for the Government to prescribe which form of communication should be employed in schools where there are pupils with hearing impairments, nor the level of support they require. Such decisions are best made in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Higher Education

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has on the number of students in full-time higher education who have not completed their course of studies in each of the past five years and the reasons, in so far as these are known, for their withdrawal from their courses.

Mr. Forman: Details of non-completion of higher education courses can be found in: (a) "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the UK" and (b) "Leaving rates among First Year Students in English Polytechnics and Colleges", a Department for Education statistical bulletin to be published in June.

Publication (a) is in the Library; publication (b) will be placed in the Library when available and a copy will be sent to the hon. Member.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what amount of borrowing approval per pupil he has provided to grant-maintained schools in each local education authority area for 1992-93; and what amounts of borrowing approval per pupil he has given to each local education authority to provide for the schools remaining within their remit.

Mr. Forth: Grant-maintained—GM—schools are prohibited from borrowing under section 57(4) of the Education Act 1988. GM schools receive capital grant direct from the Secretary of State. It is not possible to give a figure representing the average capital allocation per pupil for each LEA because the pupil numbers rise during the course of the year as more schools become incorporated.

Information on allocations per pupil for LEA-maintained schools is not immediately available in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member with this information when it is.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy (Redundancies)

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a second phase of redundancies is planned for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I announced on 21 November 1991, Official Report, column 305-6, a total reduction of 8,000 in Royal Navy numbers planned by 1995. In the initial phase of the exercise in 1992-93, 80 officers and 320 ratings were selected. I can now say that, in the second phase, approximately 450 officers and 700 ratings will be made redundant.

It is intended that personnel will be selected from categories in surplus, bearing in mind the need to maintain a balance of skills and experience. So far as possible the target will be achieved by voluntary means, but some compulsory redundancies cannot be ruled out if the correct seniority spread within the ranks and specialisations is to be achieved.

Detailed terms will be promulgated to the Navy and applications will be invited, to take effect between April and November 1993.

Gulf Conflict

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his oral answer of 19 May, Official Report, columns 147-48, what information he has about the use of air recognition systems by United States ground forces during the recent conflict in the Gulf;

(2) what consideration was given to using air recognition systems by British ground forces during Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the Gulf conflict, a secure and effective electronic identification system for ground forces did not exist. The coalition nevertheless took such practical steps as were possible to assist identification of friendly vehicles from both the ground and the air. These included fluorescent panels and inverted "V" markings. I understand that the United States was also developing infra-red beacons and lights to complement these markings, and that a number of these were sent to the Gulf towards the end of hostilities.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he plans to have with his United States counterpart about the recent verdict of the coroner's inquest in Oxford relating to the deaths of nine British service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed the matter briefly with Secretary Cheney in the margins of the Defence Planning Committee in Brussels last week. He has no plans to discuss the inquest verdict further.

Information Release

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change his policy relating to the release of official information on defence matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Policy in this area is kept under review to ensure that only information that is sensitive is withheld. The statement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister during the debate on the address on 6 May regarding the need to sweep away needless secrecy is particularly relevant.

War Graves, Thailand

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the physical security of British war graves in Thailand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are British and Commonwealth war graves at Kanchanaburi and Chungkai in Thailand which are maintained by the Commonwealth Graves Commission. We have no reason to believe that the physical security of the graves is in any way threatened.

Defence Estimates

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect to publish the 1992 Statement on the Defence Estimates before the summer recess.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since his predecessor's announcement on 18th February.

Mr. Mellor: Since the announcement of my right hon. Friend, the former Minister for the Arts on 18 February 1992, Official Report, column 72, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of a further three items: a collection of silver and nine sporting paintings in lieu of £233,250 tax; a picture "Surface Substitution" in lieu of £64,400 tax and chattels from Upton house in lieu of £484,820 tax.

The chattels are to remain at Upton house, and the painting "Surface Substitution" has been allocated to the Tate gallery. No decision has yet been taken on the allocation of the collection of silver and sporting pictures.

Radio

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes there have been in audience figures for Radios 1, 2, 3 and 4 since the decision was taken to change their broadcasting frequency from medium wave and long wave to FM only.

Mr. Mellor: In January 1988, the Government announced that the medium wave frequencies used by BBC Radio 1 and BBC Radio 3 would be made available for new services licensed by the Radio Authority. Radio 3 began broadcasting on FM only on 29 February 1992. Radio 1 and Radio 4 continue on AM and FM. The BBC decided to introduce BBC Radio 5, on the AM frequencies previously used by Radio 2, in August 1990.

I understand from the BBC that the average weekly reach for their national radio services were:

Percentages

	1987	[1]1992
Radio 1	30	28
Radio 2	22	13
Radio 3	5	4
Radio 4	15	15
Radio 5	—	5

[1] 1st quarter.

Since 1987, many new independent radio services have been opened.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will allow the BBC to recommence simultaneous broadcasting on the FM and medium wave frequencies.

Mr. Mellor: No. In general, broadcasting the same programme in one area on two frequencies is a wasteful use of the radio spectrum. The BBC decided to keep its FM frequencies, which are suitable for stereo sound broadcasting. The Radio Authority is using AM frequencies to extend listener choice.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has received concerning the quality of reception of Radios 1, 2, 3, and 4.

Mr. Mellor: I have received three letters from Members of Parliament and four letters from members of the public about the quality of reception for BBC Radio 1, 2, 3, and 4. This is, of course, primarily a matter for the BBC.

Consultants' Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give an estimate for the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1992-93.

Mr. Mellor: I estimate that the total sum paid out, or committed to be paid out, in fees by my Department to management consultants in 1992-93 is £878,400. Further fees may be paid out as and when the need to engage management consultants arises.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

14. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the United Nations team in Iraq in identifying and destroying weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Despite Iraqi obstruction and deception, United Nations inspectors have made considerable progress. Ambassador Ekeus, executive chairman of the special commission, reported his findings to the Security Council on 27 May; that report will be placed in the Library.

Destruction is well under way, and I refer my hon. Friend to the list of equipment destroyed contained in the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) in column 259.

The international community is determined to keep up the pressure; there is no question of Iraq once more becoming a threat to its neighbours.

Cyprus

16. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet the Turkish ambassador to discuss the situation in Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans for such a meeting. However my right hon. Friend has on several occasions this year had the opportunity to discuss Cyprus with Turkish Ministers. These meetings have been encouraging, and their tone is reflected in the current prospects for progress in the United Nations-led talks.

28. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the continued occupation of part of Cyprus by Turkish troops.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The continued presence in Cyprus of large numbers of foreign troops is not helpful to prospects for a settlement.

29. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to visit Cyprus to discuss the situtation regarding the border dispute.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We give full support to the United Nations Secretary-General's efforts to bring about a just and lasting settlement in Cyprus. There are current grounds for optimism; all sides have accepted the ideas endorsed in Security Council resolution 750, and the recent round of talks by United Nations envoys went well. We have frequent contact with Cypriot Ministers and all other parties to the dispute. However, we believe it important not to undertake initiatives that could in any way cut across the delicate negotiations by United Nations envoys in Cyprus itself.

24. Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Turkish Government as to the numbers of settlers from Turkey now living in northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not discussed this matter with the Government of Turkey.

Hong Kong

20. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to speed up the working of the joint liaison group in discussions on Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend raised the need for a faster pace of work in the Sino-British Liaison Group in his last meeting with the Chinese Foreign Minister here in March. We shall continue our efforts to achieve that at the next meeting of the group in Peking in June.

It is also important to achieve the right agreements for Hong Kong, and to take the time necessary to secure them.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

26. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to prevent the Government of Bosnia-Herzegovina whose independence he has recognised being removed by force of arms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We fully support United Nations Security Council resolution 752 of 15 May, which called for the immediate withdrawal or disbandment of the JNA and of elements of the Croatian army currently operating in Bosnia.

37. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans any new initiatives to help the people of Sarajevo, Bosnia-Herzogovina.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are working closely with our EC partners to find the most effective way to respond to the tragedy in Sarajevo. We fully support the efforts of United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross which are doing their utmost to cope with a very difficult situation.

Middle East

27. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the current state of the middle east peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The fifth round of bilateral negotiations between the parties took place in Washington on 27 to 30 April. Although progress towards resolution of the difficult issues involved has inevitably been slow, substantive discussions are now under way. The momentum of the peace process has been maintained in the five multilateral regional working groups which have taken place in various capitals over the last three weeks.

Nuclear Tests

30. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government to the announcement made by the French Government on 8 April of a moratorium on nuclear testing until the end of 1992.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government's policy on nuclear testing remains unchanged. We have a continuing requirement to sustain a minimum programme of tests to maintain the effectiveness and safety of our nuclear deterrent.

South Africa

31. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the South African Government to end the visa restrictions placed upon British citizens who have taken part in anti-apartheid activities.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I understand that the South African Government are prepared to consider lifting visa restrictions on receipt of requests by the individuals concerned. The British Government have in the past made individual representations to the South African Government where visas have been refused.

Libya

32. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Libya.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the speech I made during the debate on the Queen's Speech on 8 May at columns 283-4.

Yugoslavia

33. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with the constituent parts of the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom and its EC partners recognised Slovenia and Croatia as independent sovereign states on 15 January, and Bosnia-Herzegovina on 7 April. Recognition of Macedonia has been delayed on account of Greek concerns. We reserve our position of the status of the recently self-proclaimed Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

Brazil

34. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Brazilian Government about human rights.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We are in regular touch with the Brazilian authorities regarding the human rights situation in Brazil.

We are in touch with the President of the (federal) parliamentary commission on the extermination of street children and with the responsible co-ordinator in the state prosecutor's office.

We recently invited the President of the Rio state commission on street children to visit the United Kingdom to discuss the problem.

We have monitored the situation of rural workers and have made arrangements with the Brazilian authorities to be represented at legal proceedings where possible.

The Brazilians have demarcated a Yanomami reserve partly as the result of international pressure, including ours.

There will be a further opportunity to raise human rights questions when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister meets President Collor in Rio de Janeiro later this month.

EC Presidency

35. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for the British presidency of the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Her Majesty's Government will have two main priorities for the United Kingdom presidency: completion of the single market, with emphasis on public procurement, insurance and transport and energy liberalisation; and preparation for enlargement negotiations.

The Government will also take forward the future finance negotiations and develop relations with eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

Baltic States

36. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the Baltic states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have good relations with the three Baltic states. We are giving them practical help towards consolidating their independence: so far, we have committed over £1 million to various projects through he know-how fund. We support Baltic demands for the complete withdrawal of former Soviet forces. We have concluded agreements with Estonia and Lithuania to settle gold and other claims questions, and hope to reach final settlement with Latvia soon.

Israel

38. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Israel to discuss the peace process.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to visit Israel. We are in frequent contact with the present Israeli Government on the peace process. The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Levy, in Brussels on 11 May. I had a useful meeting with Mr. Levy in London on 1 May.

Kurdish People

39. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next meet the United Nations Secretary-General to discuss the position of the Kurds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our permanent representative in New York is in frequent touch with the Secretary-General on this subject. Together with the Americans and the French, we have made it clear to the Iraqis that they must end repression of their own people, including the Kurds in the north and the shi'a in the south.

Gibraltar

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals there are for Gibraltar to become a separate state within the European Community; and if he will make a statement on negotiations with Spain about the future of Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I am not aware of any such proposals. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plans to meet his Spanish counterpart to discuss Gibraltar later in the year, in one of the regular bilateral meetings under the Brussels negotiating process.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Alexander Zaslavsky and his family of Kiev.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Ukrainian authorities the case of refusenik Alexander Zaslavsky and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Alexander Klebanov and his family of Kuibishev.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Alexander Klebanov and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Danil Levitan and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have made various representations to the Russian authorities on behalf of Mr. Levitan. In Moscow in March, I raised human rights issues with the Russian First Deputy Foreign Minister, including the case of Mr. Levitan.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Sylvia Turkova and her family in St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Sylvia Turkova and her family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Alexander Segal and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Alexander Segal and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Yakov Sverdlov and his family of Gorky.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Yakov Sverdlov and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Arkady Hordon and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Arkady Hordon and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Boris Metrick and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Boris Metrick and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Alexander Shaknovich and his family of Kiev.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Ukrainian authorities the case of refusenik Alexander Shaknovich and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Boma Mikhanovsky and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Boma Mikhanovsky and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Valentin Perelstein and his family in Moscow.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Valentin Perelstein and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made on behalf of refusenik Vladimir Sluchak and his family of St. Petersburg.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can raise with the Russian authorities the case of refusenik Vladimir Sluchak and his family, but to make effective representations we shall need further details.

Antarctica

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to repeal the Antarctic Minerals Act 1989 and ratify the Antarctica environmental protocol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 15 May at column 239.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Education Council met on 1 June. The Tourism Council will meet on 4 June. Ministers will discuss the tourism action plan and a report on the effects of Community policies and programmes on tourism.

The Telecommunications Council will meet on 5 June and Ministers will discuss the EC Green Paper on postal services and the action plan for the introduction of advanced TV services.

The ECOFIN Council will meet on 9 June. The Council will discuss the Spanish economic convergence as part of its continuing exercise of multilateral surveillance and the Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community—Delors II. The abolition of fiscal frontiers will also be discussed. Draft directives for the harmonisation of the rates and structures of excise duty on alcohol, mineral oils and tobacco products are also scheduled for discussion as are the draft VAT rates directive and the draft seventh VAT directive which relates to the sale of second-hand goods, works of art, antiques and collectors items. The proposed capital adequacy directive may also be considered.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 9 June. Ministers will discuss a proposal for the Council regulation laying down common marketing standards for preserved tuna and bouita. It will also discuss the progress report on the establishment of a fisheries regime in the Mediterranean and consider the Commission report on discards.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 15 and 16 June and will discuss the Commission's proposal for the Future Financing of the Community—"Delors II package". Ministers will also discuss the necessary preparation for entry into force of the Maastricht treaty on European union. Ministers will consider preparations for the European Council and possibly progress towards establishing a European drug monitoring centre.

Ministers are likely to discuss a range of issues on EC relations with the former Soviet Union, including follow-up to the recent conference at Lisbon on aid, and progress on new trade and co-operation agreements with the principal Commonwealth of Independent States republics. Ministers will consider communications from the Commission about the Community's relations with Iran, Japan and Maghreb; aids for Poseidom, Poseican and Poseima; developments in the negotiations on the GATT Uruguay round; and the handling of the Swiss application for EC membership. Community trade and co-operation agreements with Brazil, Mongolia and Macao may be signed.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 15 and 16 June. It will discuss wild game meat and milk products. Ministers may also discuss animal health, amendments to directives 90/425 and 89/662 and reform of the common agricultural policy.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 18 and 19 June and will discuss extraction solvents. The Council may also consider contaminants in foodstuffs; colours in foodstuffs; sweeteners; European company statute, the second company law directive; procurement of services by the utilities; public procurement of services; consolidation of works directive; future system for free circulation of medicinal products; homeopathic and veterinary homeopathic medicinal products; medical devices; data protection; rental and lending directives; trademark regulations; second diplomas directive; two and three-wheel vehicles type approval; external projections; hallmarking; trans-European networks, and frontiers.

The Industry Council will meet on 17 June and will discuss the financial arrangements for the European Coal and Steel Community between now and 2002. Commission communications on the automobile, aerospace and textile industries are also likely to be considered. There may also be discussion on industrial co-operation with third countries; German proposals to give aid for the restructuring of the shipbuilding industry in the former East Germany; electronics; small and medium-sized enterprises; progress of work on maritime and on non-energy mining policy and steel carbon tax.

The Transport Council will meet on 22 and 23 June and will discuss road haulage cabotage; passenger transport cabotage; maritime cabotage and the third aviation package. Ministers may also discuss inland waterway external relations.

The Social Affairs Council will meet on 24 June. The proposed directives on working time and the protection of pregnant workers are likely to be discussed and the proposed directive on health and safety in mines and quarries may also be discussed. The Council will discuss the directives on health and safety signs and safety on construction sites. Ministers may also consider the recommendations on financial participation; amendments to regulations 1612/68 and directive 68/360 on the free movement of workers and the convergence of social protection and sufficient resources.

The Consumer Council will meet on 29 June. It will discuss general product safety; unfair contract terms; comparative advertising; EHLASS; liability of the suppliers of services and a resolution on future priorities for consumer protection policy. Ministers may also discuss distance selling, timeshare and a rapid information exchange system.

Afghanistan

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's relations with Afghanistan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A visiting mission of British officials will be in Kabul from 2 to 5 June. Its purpose will be to establish formal and friendly contact on behalf of the British Government with the interim Government now in authority there. It expects to have meetings with leading members of the interim Government. It will also look into the question of a possible reopening of our embassy in Kabul.

WALES

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by district council the number of (a) owner occupiers and private tenants and (b) council tenants who have applied in each of the last two years for the disabled facilities grant; in each category by district council, how many adaptations were carried out; what was the average time taken to complete adaptations from the time the request for adaptation was made; and what was the average amount paid by (i) applicants, (ii) district councils and (iii) central Government.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 May 1992]: Table 1 gives the numbers of disabled facilities grants paid to owner occupiers and types of tenants in each of the last two years. The information for 1990 contains only two quarters' data as the disabled facilities grants, paid under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, were only introduced in July 1990.

The average value of grants and the average contribution from the applicant towards the cost of works is given in table 2. The figures are not held centrally by tenure. The Department provides a 75 per cent. Exchequer contribution towards local authorities' expenditure in Wales on disabled facilities grants for owner-occupiers and private tenants. Expenditure on these grants for council tenants is eligible for 100 per cent. subsidy from the housing revenue account.

The information on the numbers of applications for grants and the average length of time from application to completion of grant is not centrally available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 May 1992]: The numbers of grants completed for disabled people under the Housing Act 1985 and the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, introduced in April 1990, are given in table 1. Local authorities also perform adaptations on their own stock to provide dwellings suitable for the disabled. Table 2 contains this information.

Information on the numbers of applications for grants and the average length of time from application to completion of grant is not centrally available.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list, by district council, the amount of money spent on adaptations to the homes of disabled people in each of the last five years; and what contribution was made towards these costs from central Government funds.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 18 May 1992]: The amounts of grant paid to disabled people under the Housing Act 1985 and the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, introduced in April 1990, are given in the table. In addition to expenditure through grants, local authorities and social services spend money adapting dwellings for disabled people. This information is not centrally available.

Because the support arrangements in Wales and England are similar, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 2 June by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list each type of parliamentary photo-identity pass and the number currently issued of each type.

Mr. Beith: It is not considered desirable to publish detailed information about the security pass system. If the hon. Member has any matter of specific concern he should consult the Serjeant at Arms.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission (1) what percentage of the total work force employed by the House of Commons Commission is registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within the House; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to implement additional measures to encourage the employment of disabled people in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The number of registered disabled persons employed by the Commission represents 0·7 per cent. of the total House of Commons staff. That figure does not include registered disabled persons employed by Members or by organisations in the House for which the Commission does not at present have responsibility.

The Commission's policy on the employment of disabled persons is based on the policy set out in the Commission's fourth annual report for 1981-82 (HC 418, Session 1981-82). The Commission has appointed a disabled persons officer who is responsible for promulgating the Commission's policy on the employment of disabled people and for advising management and staff on matters concerning disablement. He keeps up to date with civil service policy on disablement and from time to time arranges seminars for departmental management with organisations concerned with disabled people.

Implementation of the Commission's policy is effected through a number of practical measures:

(1) All press advertisements for vacancies in the House of Commons Service bear the legend "Applications from Registered Disabled Persons are welcomed".
(2) Information is given to applicants for House of Commons vacancies which makes it clear that disablement in itself is not a bar to employment provided the disability does not prevent the postholder from satisfactorily carrying out the duties of the post.
(3) Management will provide special equipment, appliances, etc. to assist disabled staff in carrying out their duties.
(4) Provided registered disabled applicants for House of Commons posts have the qualifications and experience called for in recruitment literature, they will be called to interview unless it is clear from their application form that their disability would prevent them from satisfactorily carrying out the duties of the post.
(5) An unestablished (health) appointment may be offered in cases where there is a doubt as to whether a candidate can meet the House of Commons Service health standard. This provides a period of employment for up to five years in which a candidate's health can be reviewed prior to a final decision being taken on whether he/she satisfies the health standard required for permanent appointments.
(6) Registered disabled persons who do not possess the academic qualifications specified for certain clerical posts may opt to take the clerical tests as a means of providing evidence that their general level of education is adequate to meet the needs of the post.

SCOTLAND

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to ensure that the housing co-operative sector is fully consulted on matters which concern it; and if he wil make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Housing co-operatives are represented by the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations and the Confederation of Scottish Housing Co-operatives, a forum within the federation. Scottish Homes consults regularly with the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made to expand the number of housing co-operatives and other tenant-led initiatives in Scotland and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is committed to supporting housing co-operatives and other tenant-led initiatives since they give tenants a greater say in the management of their housing. This commitment has been demonstrated through the substantial resources devoted to the finance of housing associations and housing co-operatives since 1979, particularly since the establishment of Scottish Homes in 1989. Since 1 April 1989, housing co-operatives have totalled 40 per cent. of new housing association registrations and now represent 16 per cent. of registered housing associations compared to 11 per cent. in 1989.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that the housing co-operative sector is represented on the board of Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All members of the Scottish Homes board are appointed for their potential personal contribution and not as representatives of particular sectional, geographical or political interests. The present board has a mix of expertise and, in considering future appointments, my right hon. Friend's aim will be to achieve the mix appropriate to Scottish Homes' needs at the time. The housing co-operative sector may well contain potential candidates for the board but they will be considered on their merits as individuals, not as representatives of that sector.

Urban Aid

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of programmes and projects receiving urban aid in the current financial year, the capital and annual revenue value of each, the sponsoring organisation and the date that each commenced and is due to terminate.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am arranging for the information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount of urban aid finance, both in terms of capital and revenue expenditure, awarded to each area of priority treatment in Strathclyde on a per capita basis; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Information is not held in the form requested. Inquiries are being made as to whether it can be produced without disproportionate cost and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of persons registered in Scotland on (a) an electoral register and (b) community charge register.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: OPCS Monitor (EL 92/1) published on 2 April 1992 shows the total number of parliamentary electors in Scotland, including attainers, service voters and voluntary patients, on the 1992 electoral registers as 3,929,112. The publication date for the registers is 16 February 1992. The total number of persons on the community charge register in Scotland, as at 1 June 1991 was 3,834,276.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will mount a major campaign to promote electoral registration in conjunction with local authorities in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the significant sums currently spent on publicity for electoral registration purposes represent good value for money. For 1992-93 the campaign budget for electoral registration publicity is £48,000.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will announce the membership of the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what guidance he intends to issue to the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council on the exercise of its functions.

Mr. Lang: I am pleased to confirm that Professor John C. Shaw CBE, deputy governor of the Bank of Scotland has accepted formal appointment as part-time chairman of the council with immediate effect. I am grateful to Professor Shaw for the considerable efforts he has already made in his capacity as chairman designate. I have today sent a letter of guidance to Professor Shaw setting out how I expect the council to approach its responsibilities. The letter covers the council's functions and organisation, aspects of Government policy of particular relevance to the council, and the framework through which the council will account for their activities. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

I am also delighted to announce that Professor John Sizer CBE, the head of the business school and professor of financial management at Loughborough university, has agreed to serve as the council's chief executive. Professor Sizer will also sit on the council in an ex officio capacity.

In addition to Professor Shaw and Professor Sizer, the following have agreed to accept appointment to the council:

Professor Michael Bond, vice-principal and administrative dean of the faculty of medicine, university of Glasgow.
Dr. Christopher Carter, vice-principal, Duncan of Jordanstone college of art.
Professor John Darby, Assistant principal, Napier polytechnic.
Professor Robert Jack CBE, senior partner, McGrigor Donald, solicitors, and professor of mercantile law, university of Glasgow.
Mr. John McClelland, UK director of manufacturing and hardware at IBM.
Mr. Ronald Miller CBE, executive chairman of Dawson International.
Miss Eileen Murdoch OBE, headmistress, St. Augustine's school, Edinburgh.
Professor Janet Sprent, professor of plant biology, university of Dundee.
Mr. Ian Wood CBE, chairman and managing director of the John Wood Group plc.
Mr. James Wright, vice chancellor, university of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

I am confident we have achieved an excellent blend of academic, industrial and professional experience which will serve the new council well in the exciting and important tasks which lie ahead.

SCOTLAND

Management Agreements

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the management agreements entered into under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in each year since 1982; and if he will give, in each case, the types of development which have been proposed by the landowner, and are prohibited under the agreement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The information is not held by the Scottish Office environment department. I shall ask Scottish Natural Heritage to write to the hon. Member.

Forestry Commission Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the criteria used by the Forestry Commission when choosing plantation and plantable land for sale; whether particular land has been designated which will not be sold; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission follows the guidelines on the selection of areas for disposal set out by the then Secretary of State for Scotland, Mr. George Younger, in a letter to the Forestry Commission chairman dated 28 May 1981. This letter was reproduced at appendix V of the commission's 1981-82 annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sites where (a) access agreements have been reached and (b) are being negotiated following the sale of Forestry Commission land in each county or Scottish region in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Where access agreements are negotiated and agreed, this is done before the sale of the woodland.

One access agreement has been agreed for land at Steam Mills in Gloucestershire.

Fourteen access agreements are currently being negotiated in Devon, East Sussex, Humberside, North Yorkshire, Somerset (two), West Sussex, Dyfed (five), Gwent and West Glamorgan. It would not be appropriate to list the particular sites while these negotiations are in progress.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount has been received by Her Majesty's Government from sale of Forestry Commission land; what is his current estimate of total receipts from the disposal of Forestry Commission land; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: A total of £161·5 million was raised from the sale of Forestry Commission land and property between 1981 and 31 March 1992. Estimates of receipts from such sales for the three years to 31 March 1995 have been published in the Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95 (Cm 1915), as follows:

	£ million
1992-93	15·0
1993-94	16·0
1994-95	16·0

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The running costs of the Scottish Office information directorate for each year from 1985-86 are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	0·9
1986-87	1·0
1987-88	1·1
1988-89	1·2
1989-90	1·4
1990-91	1·7
1991-92	1·9
1992-93	[1]2·0

[1] Estimate.

These figures exclude expenditure on information campaigns

Directly comparable figures for years prior to the introduction of new Scottish Office budgetary arrangements in 1985-86 are not available.

Consultants' Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 7 May 1991 at column 421. Additional information for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93 is as follows:

1991-92	[1]1,235,070
1992-93	[2]956,669

[1] Outturn.
[2] Estimated figure.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of birds of prey that have been killed by persons in each year since 1987.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The numbers of birds of prey recorded as having been poisoned in Scotland are:

	Number
1987	11
1988	12
1989	16
1990	17
1991	12

Information about numbers of birds of prey killed in other ways is not available centrally.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since 1 November 1991.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I shall place a list of surveys in the Library as soon as possible.

Urban Aid Grants

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he applies when considering applications for urban aid grants; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Following a review of the urban programme new guidelines were published on 20 February 1992 aimed at strengthening its impact. These included the revised eligibility and priority criteria which will apply to future applications for funding under the urban programme. A copy of the guidelines has been placed in the Library of the House.

Health Service Trusts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what consultations he intends to carry out with local people regarding applications by hospitals and services for trust status within the Argyll and Clyde health board; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he plans to consider any formal expressions of interest in trust status from hospitals or services with Argyll and Clyde health board; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many formal expressions of interest in applying for trust status have been received from hospitals or services within the Argyll and Clyde health board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: A formal expression of interest in NHS trust status has been made on behalf of staff at the Royal Alexandra hospital, Paisley. Any application which results will be subject to the statutory three months' public consultation.

Community Policing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chief constable of Strathclyde to discuss community policing; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. Deployment of police officers is a matter for the chief constable within the overall resources available to him. I am sure that the chief constable will have noted the comment of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, in his recent report on Strathclyde police, commending the steps taken by the force to promote community policing, and underlining the need for every effort to be made to maintain and expand such policing. What can be achieved depends in part on the resources made available by the police authority.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was granted to farmers in Scotland through the ESA scheme in 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Approximately £967,000 was paid in 1990-91 to farmers and crofters in connection with the ESA scheme in Scotland.

Industrial and Commercial Co-operatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are in place to assist the development of industrial and commercial co-operatives; what plans he has to amend these; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: About £200,000 per annum is paid currently from the urban programme to five workers' co-operative development projects in deprived urban areas of Strathclyde and Fife regions. Under the new urban programme guidelines issued in February, applications for funding other such projects can still be made.

Renfrewshire Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of Renfrewshire Enterprise's 1992-93 budget for (a) capital and (b) revenue expenditure was legally committed on 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 2 March 1992, Official Report, column 69.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the Scottish Office contribution to (a) the capital and (b) the revenue budgets of each Scottish Enterprise company for 1991 to 1993 on a per capita basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The allocation of resources to local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Trees

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those species of tree which currently provide a significant proportion of tree cover in the United Kingdom, estimating for each species what proportion of tree cover is provided; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The proportion of each tree species in United Kingdom woodlands are as follows:

Species	Tree cover percentage
Broadleaves
Oak	8
Birch	6
Ash	3
Beech	3
Sycamore	3
Other broadleaves	9
Conifers
Sitka spruce	33
Scots pine	10
Lodgepole pine	7
Larch	7
Norway spruce	4
Other conifers	7

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage area of Britain is covered by forest and woodland currently; and what is his forecast for the year 2000.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Some 10·3 per cent. of Britain is currently covered by forest and woodland. This is expected to increase to about 11 per cent. by the year 2000.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total acreage in each county of evergreen forest and deciduous forest for each of the last 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The latest year for which information is available on areas of woodland by county is 1980. This is given in Forestry Commission Bulletin 63, Census of Woodlands and Trees 1979-82, a copy of which is in the Library.

This information is not available for any other period in the last 15 years, but the total areas of woodland by country, divided between conifers and broadleaves, has been published each year by the Forestry Commission in "Forestry Facts and Figures". These figures are given in the table.

[1] Other woodland consists of scrub, felled woodland and other areas managed chiefly for amenity and public recreation.
[2] The figures for 1983 and subsequent years are based on the Census of Woodlands and Trees, 1979-82. This resulted in a significant reclassification of forest land.
[3] In 1990, 25,000 hectares of Forestry Commission woodland were reclassified as other woodland.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of (a) deciduous and

(b) evergreen trees planted in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years; and if he will give his estimate of the number felled.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: No record is kept of the number of trees planted, although an estimate can be made from the areas of conifers and broadleaves planted or grant-aided by the Forestry Commission over the last 10 years. These are as follows:

Year ended 31 March	Area planted (thousands hectares)		Estimated numbers planted (millions)
	conifers	broadleaves	conifers	broadleaves
1982	31	1	78	1

Information is available on the volume of timber felled each year, but it is not possible to convert this into an estimate of the number of trees felled. However, when granting permission for tree felling the Forestry Commission normally requires that the trees are replaced.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to use market instruments to encourage preservation and planting of native wildwoods in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: In accordance with the Government's policy, the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme offers grants to private owners for the management and extension of native woodlands. Management grants were introduced from 1 April this year and include a special rate for ancient and semi-natural woodlands.

Johnstone Clinic

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the new Johnstone clinic to open; what services it will provide to the local community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The position remains as set out in replies to the hon. Member of 13 February and 22 October 1991. The clinic will open this summer and will provide the following services.

Audiology
Ante natal
Child health
Child physiotherapy
Adult physiotherapy
Chiropody
Coronary screening
Cytology
Dental
Family planning
Family psychology
Hearing tests
Menopause clinic
Mother craft
Orthoptics
Psychiatry
Speech therapy
Ear, nose and throat

Housing Revenue Account Allocations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to announce supplementary housing revenue account allocations or additional capital consent for district councils within the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Yes. Supplementary housing capital allocations will be made later in the year to authorities incurring expenditure under the provisions for assistance to owners of defective housing in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. Other supplementary housing capital allocations will be considered if resources become available. In addition, councils in former coal-mining areas eligible to receive RECHAR grants have been advised that non-housing supplementary consents will be issued matching RECHAR receipts from the European Commission.

Housing Associations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to develop the role of housing associations and housing co-operatives; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: My right hon. Friend's commitment to the development of housing associations as the main provider of new social rented housing has been demonstrated through the substantial resources allocated to Scottish Homes and, before 1989, to one of its predecessor bodies, the Housing Corporation in Scotland. As a result of this commitment it was recently possible to celebrate the opening of the 50,000th grant-aided housing association unit in Scotland.

My right hon. Friend is committed to giving tenants a greater say in the management of their own housing. The continued development of housing associations and co-operatives will play an important role in achieving that objective. Over £200 million of Scottish Homes' total programme of £333 million will go to housing associations and co-operatives in 1992-93.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the chairman of Argyll and Clyde health board to discuss the provision of health services in that area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: My noble and learned Friend Lord Fraser meets health board chairmen on a regular basis to discuss the provision of health services in Scotland. The next meeting is scheduled for 10 July 1992.

Court Administration

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review court administration procedures with a view to improving the utilisation of court time and police resources; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The programming of business in the courts is a responsibility of the judicial heads of these courts and not of the Executive. Programming in the sheriff courts is at present being reviewed by groups under the chairmanship of Sheriff Principal Gordon Nicholson QC and Sheriff Graham Cox, and we await the outcome with interest.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local enterprise company area, or other feasible sub-regional classification, in Scotland, and for Scotland and Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, the number and proportion of employment training ex-trainees who were (a) self-employed, (b) in a job club, (c) unemployed and claiming benefit, (d) unemployed and not claiming benefit, and (e) other.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The information, disaggregated by local enterprise company area in those cases where sufficient information is available, is set out in the table.

Training

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local enterprise company area in Scotland and for Scotland and Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, the qualifications gained by employment training trainees, and any credits towards qualifications.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The figures shown in the table list the full vocational qualifications gained by employment training trainees within each local enterprise company area and for Scotland as a whole both during March 1992 and over the full year (1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992). Information is not collected in this form on credits gained towards vocational qualifications.

Debt Payment

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what distribution has taken place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility of the Department of Employment's publication "Making the Cash Flow—a Guide to the Payment of Commercial Debt for Buyers and Small Business Suppliers".

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: "Making the Cash Flow" was prepared as guidance for the private sector and there was therefore no formal distribution to other Government Departments. Guidelines on purchasing by Government Departments already exist and are distributed by Her Majesty's Treasury.

The Department of Employment has been undertaking a survey of the payment record of Government Departments during the financial year 1991-92 and the results of this exercise will be published in the near future by the Department of Trade and Industry, which now has responsibility for small firm issues, including late payment. After studying these results the Department will consider what further measures, if any, may be necessary to encourage prompt payment by the public sector.

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policy guidelines are currently in place within his Department and the purchasing organisations for which he has responsibility in respect of the prompt payment of commercial debt, particularly as it relates to small business suppliers.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Government Departments, including their executive agencies, are required to pay their bills promptly. The timing of payment should normally be stipulated in Government contracts. Where there is no contractual position or other understanding, Departments should pay within 30 days of receipt of goods/services or the presentation of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment, whichever is the later.

To help encourage prompt payment of bills by Government contractors to their sub-contractors all Government contracts are to contain a clause requiring the supplier or contractor to pay its sub contractors promptly. In the absence of normal practice to the contrary for that type of contract or other special circumstances, the commitment should be to pay the sub-contractor within 30 days of receipt of a valid invoice or similar demand for payment as defined by the contract.

A7

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to commence the study he recently undertook to conduct into the potential economic impact on local retailers of the proposal to re-route the A7 through the town of Hawick avoiding North Bridge street; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I expect the commission to be awarded and the assessment to begin before the end of June.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now authorise the Borders road authority to undertake the necessary preparatory work to enable the Colterscleuch stretch of the A7 to be improved along the existing line of the road at the earliest possible date; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: Borders regional council has already been commissioned to prepare an appropriate scheme to improve the A7 at Colterscleuch. The brief involves comparative analyses of potential improvements both along the existing alignment and on a new alignment so that the optimum scheme can be identified. Design work is proceeding on both these options in parallel and good progress is being made. It is anticipated that a preferred scheme can be chosen and fully designed by spring next year.

Completion of statutory procedures, including resolution or determination of any objections, and the availability of finance, will, of course, influence when construction can start.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The figures for 1988-89 to 1991-92 were:

	1988-89 (£)	1989-90 (£)	1990-91 (£)	1991-92 (£)
Television advertising	576,000	974,000	741,000	556,000
Radio advertising	40,000	85,000	188,000	141,000
Newspaper advertising	378,000	1,022,000	613,000	853,000
Other promotional material	933,000	1,001,000	1,098,000	799,000

An analysis for 1979-80 to 1987-88 is not available in the form requested.

Detailed decisions on expenditure by media for 1992-93 have not yet been taken.

Nursery Education

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of three and four-year-old children were receiving nursery education at local authority maintained nursery schools in each education authority area in Scotland during the present academic year, or at the latest date for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The information requested is as follows:

Regional education authority	No. of three and four-year-olds receiving nursery education[1]	Percentage of three and four-year-old population in region[2]
Borders	484	20·1
Central	2,733	41·4

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for improvements to the A1 trunk road in East Lothian, giving the timetable, route and cost for dualling the sections between Bankton and Amisfield and onwards to Dunbar.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 June 1992]: I am pleased to announce that the draft enabling orders and scheme for reclassifying, as a special road, the section of existing dual carriageway between old Craighall roundabout and Tranent and for extending the special road by dualling the A1 between Tranent and east of Haddington were published last Friday, 29 May 1992. A public exhibition of the proposals is being held locally from today until Thursday. The alignment of the route is defined in the draft instruments, copies of which have been deposited in several public buildings along the route for public inspection. The proposed route of the new road follows a line to the north of Gladsmuir and to the north of Haddington. The estimated cost of the scheme is £36 million.

Although the route proposed has been carefully selected the reaction to it may influence the timetable for concluding the necessary statutory procedures. As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 5 March 1992, subject to good progress with these procedures, development of the design should enable a start to works in the period 1993-94 to 1994-95 as announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 5 March 1992.

Preparation work for the more easterly section from east of Haddington to Dunbar is also under way, following the published section by approximately 12 months. No decisions have yet been taken on a proposed alignment of that section.

Fish Farming

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to take to assist the fish farming industry following the expiry of the EC minimum import price regulations on 31 May; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 June 1992]: My officials have had discussions with the two salmon farmers' associations about ideas to restore stability to the EC market for salmon, including the establishment of producer organisations. We expect detailed proposals from the industry very shortly.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made.

The running cost limit for class XII, vote 4 of £2,410,000 will be increased by £3,164,000 to £5,574,000. The running cost limit for class VIII, vote 6, will be £8,356,000 as before on the transfer of responsibility for that vote from the Department of the Environment to the Department of National Heritage. The total running cost limit therefore becomes £13,930,000.

The increase gives effect to the creation of the new Department of National Heritage. It takes provisions in respect of the functions transferred from the Office of Arts and Libraries, the Department of the Environment, the Home Office, the Department of Employment, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Education to form the new Department. The increase will be met by payments from these Departments and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Football Grounds

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if there is to be a reconsideration of the policy towards the all-seating requirement at football matches.

Mr. Mellor: The Government keep under continual scrutiny the safety of sports grounds. We continue to support the principles of improved spectator safety and comfort which were set out by Lord Justice Taylor in his final report on the Hillsborough stadium disaster. In recent months we have been examining the all-seating requirement for Football League grounds in the context of the representations that have been made and our concern to ensure the highest standards of safety given all the factors involved, including the size of particular grounds, league status and the financial health of the clubs concerned. However, the safety of our sports grounds must remain paramount.

We have decided that it would be wrong to review either the principle or the timetable for all seating at first division grounds in the Football League, the new premier league. It is essential that our top clubs meet the standards necessary to compete in Europe and make full use of the resources available to them to provide grounds of which we can all be proud. We also remain firmly committed to the principle of all-seating for the great majority of second division clubs.

However, there may be equally compelling reasons not to proceed with an all-seating requirement at all third and fourth division clubs in the Football League. We also need to consider the position of those second division clubs with very low average attendances. Further representations are being invited from a number of interested organisations to assist me in finalising our re-examination of these and related issues. I have set a four-week period for the receipt of these further views and I shall announce my conclusions speedily thereafter.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland, will make a separate statement about the position in Scotland.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Postgraduate Student Awards

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will increase the amount of money available to research councils and similar bodies for funding postgraduate student awards.

Mr. Waldegrave: The five research councils, the Royal Society and the Fellowship of Engineering receive substantial funding through the science budget to develop and maintain a world competitive United Kingdom science base. Within the resources available to them, the research councils are free to determine the numbers of postgraduate awards they make and the level of tax-free maintenance grant paid to students.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what percentage of the total work force of the civil service are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within the civil service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: A total of 1·4 per cent. of civil servants are registered as disabled. This is above the proportion —1·2 per cent.—of people registered disabled in the work force as a whole. In addition, the civil service employs many people with disabilities who have chosen not to register. Progress on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service is reported on annually in the OMCS publication "Independent", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

My Department issues a revised code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service in 1990 and will continue to develop and spread best practice and to monitor progress. A recent initiative is the development by the Civil Service college of positive action training for staff with disabilities.

Cash Limits

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if there are any proposals to change the 1992-93 cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service—class XIX, vote 1—will be increased by £436,000 from £38,023,000 to £38,459,000. The Department's running costs limit will be increased by £3,759,000 from £45,339,000 to £49,098,000.

The increase is required to reflect the machinery of government changes announced after the general election and to cover the increased costs of physical security. The latter will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Executive Agencies

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what targets have been set for his Department's executive agencies in 1992-93.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) has three executive agencies; the Civil Service college, the Civil Service Occupational Health Service and Recruitment and Assessment Services. The primary target for each agency is to cover its costs in trading terms from income. In addition, the following key targets have been set for each agency in 1992-93.

Civil Service College

(i) To earn £157,000 from consultancy.
(ii) To attract amongst the students from the Civil Service —6,050 at Grade 7 or above, and 2,400 below Grade 7 who are in development schemes.
(iii) To attract 2,100 students for externally validated qualifications.
(iv) To attract 550 students from the private sector.
(v) To earn 79 per cent. of course evaluations in the two highest categories.

There is also a value-for-money target whereby the rating of college services as revealed by a detailed survey of the views of students must increase over the five-year period to 1995 by 10 per cent. more than the real cost of the college's output.

Civil Service Occupational Health Service

(i) To achieve a cost per productive professional day (including administrative and overhead costs) of £267 or less.
(ii) To achieve an average cost per case referral of £24 or less.
(iii) To earn 78 per cent. of customer post-service evaluations in the two highest categories.
(iv) To turn round within 40 days 65 per cent. of case referrals where additional information is sougth and within 15 days 87 per cent. of referrals where no additional information is sought.

Recruitment and Assessment Services

(i) To achieve volumes of business of 470 comprehensive recruitment schemes, 180 partial recruitment schemes and 1,000 consultancy days.
(ii) To achieve income of £565,000 from the sale and marketing of biodata and tests, £160,000 from publicity services and £60,000 from 'Helpline' and related ad hoc services.
(iii) To increase productivity by 15 per cent. over forecast 1991-92 levels.
(iv) To improve the quality of service to recruitment customers and achieve the following ratings in customer sign off reports—Overall satisfaction 86 per cent.—Administration 81 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

Competitive Training

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which responsibilities have been transferred from the Department of the Environment to the Department of National Heritage in relation to compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Responsibility for sport, including policy on compulsory competitive tendering for the management of sports and leisure facilities, was transferred from my Department to the Department of Education and Science in November 1990, and thence to the Department of National Heritage when it was established, in April 1992. My Department retains responsibility for compulsory competitive tendering generally and for implementation of the relevant legislation.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and if he will give an estimate for 1992-93;

(2) if he will give separate figures for the spending by his Department on (a) television advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) newspaper advertising and (d) other promotional material in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his latest estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: The information in respect of paid publicity and associated staff costs for my Department (including agencies) is:

	£ million
1985-86	3·5
1986-87	4·2
1987-88	4·8
1988-89	6·9

1990-91	7·5
1991-92	8·1
1992-93	[1]17·7

[1] Estimate.

Expenditure is not broken down between different publicity media. Information relating to financial years 1979-80 to 1984-85 inclusive is not readily available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the English local authorities in receipt of part of the £15 million allocation of supplementary credit approvals for recycling investment during 1992-93 and the total amount allocated to each authority.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is set out in the table:

New Housing

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to enable local authorities to play a more active role in the facilitation of the building of new homes by housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has recently issued a consultation paper which includes proposals aimed at co-ordinating decisions on the initial allocations of Housing Corporation funding with local authorities' housing strategies. The paper builds on authorities' role as enablers, which involves facilitating the development of social housing by housing associations or other providers, for example by the use of planning powers, or by providing land for housing. It proposes a framework for discussions on housing needs, and the allocation of resources to meet these needs. These discussions will involve housing authorities; the regional offices of the Housing Corporation, who are the main providers of public funding for new social housing; and the regional offices of my Department.

Copies of the consultation paper, which is entitled "The Development of the Local Authority Housing Investment Programme Process", are in the Library; responses are invited by 26 June.

Coastal and Marine Planning

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans have been made to establish a governmental body responsible for the strategic and co-ordinated approach to the planning and regulation of activities in the coastal and marine environment.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke North on 14 May [Official Report, column 197].

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will re-establish grants for energy conservation in the domestic sector.

Mr. Maclean: The Department provides grants to householders on low incomes for energy efficiency measures through the home energy efficiency scheme. Finance to encourage energy efficiency measures in housing is also made available through house renovation grants and minor works assistance, local authorities' council housing repair and improvement programmes, the green house demonstration programme and estate action.

The Energy Savings Trust announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 13 May Official Report, column 136, is also expected to make grants available to improve energy efficiency.

Separate arrangements for grants to householders on low incomes for energy efficiency measures apply in Northern Ireland and are administered by the Department of Economic Development.

Opencast Mining, Baddesley Ensor

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the report of the public inquiry into the application for an opencast coal mine at Baddesley Ensor in north Warwickshire to be published.

Mr. Baldry: The inspector's report is being considered, and will be published as soon as a decision has been issued. I shall ensure that the hon. Member is sent a copy at the same time.

Ozone-destroying Chemicals

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that the production of all ozone-destroying chemicals such as CFCs, HFCs, methyl chloroform, carbon tetrachloride and halons will be stopped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Montreal Protocol, which phases out the production and supply of CFCs, halons, carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform, will be reviewed in November. The United Kingdom is co-chairing the official level negotiations towards that review. The United Kingdom Government and the EC are committed to phasing out these substances by the end of 1995 at the latest and are urging other parties to the protocol to do the same. Both United Kingdom CFC producers will cease production no later than that date. HFCs do not deplete ozone and cannot, therefore be controlled by the protocol.

Council Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to start publication of council tax property valuations so that appeals can begin; and what pattern publication will follow.

Mr. Robin Squire: Valuation lists for all billing authorities will be compiled at 1 April 1993 and will be deposited at the billing authority's principal office for public inspection, as well as being available at the local valuation office. Taxpayers who wish to appeal will be able to do so after 1 April 1993.

The first council tax bills will include a notification of the band of the property. Occupiers of those properties which are exempt from the tax and who therefore would not receive a bill will be sent a separate notification of the band of the property.

Draft lists will be provided to billing authorities between 15 November and 1 December 1992 and will also be available for public inspection.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of homes have been valued by estate agents for the new council tax; when the operation will be completed; what is his estimate of the total cost; and how much of this cost will be borne by central Government.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Valuation Office Agency have contracted private sector valuers to assist them with the valuation of 57 per cent. of homes in England. The contracts required the work to be completed by 31 May 1992. The cost of the contracts in England is under £18 million, entirely borne by central Government.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, I propose to make the following changes;

(i) the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 5 (central environmental services etc.) will be reduced by £659,000 from £315,931,000 to £315,272,000, to enable £660,000 of additional resources to be transferred to Class VIII, Vote 8 for research by her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

(ii) the running cost limit for Class VIII, Vote 7 (Property Holdings and Central Support Services) will be reduced by £8,643,000 from £56,844,000 to £48,201,000. This is as a result of the transfer of administration costs to Class VIII, Vote 8 in respect of a part of the Directorate of Central Support Services which has been absorbed into the Department's Construction Directorate and the transfer of administration costs of Parliamentary Works staff to the House of Commons and House of Lords' Votes.

(iii) the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 9 (Revenue Support Grant, payments of non-domestic rates, Valuation Offices services, etc. England) will be increased by £56,500,000 from £29,473,833,000 to £29,530,333,000. The increase will provide for payments of additional grant for local education authorities in respect of the extra costs associated with the teachers' pay award, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 10 February.

As the result of these and other changes the Department's running cost limit has been increased by £500,000 from £201,116,000 to £201,616,000.

All the above changes are either claims on the Reserve or are offset elsewhere and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Council Tax

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to lay the special grant report covering the payment of grant for the costs of preparing for the council tax.

Mr. Howard: I have today laid before the House the special grant report which provides details of the grant I propose to pay to billing authorities for their revenue costs in preparing for the council tax. The amount of grant is £85·975 million. This grant will help authorities in the smooth implementation of the council tax.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any change to the running cost limit on PSA Services Vote in 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running cost limit for Class VIII, Vote 12 will be reduced by £33,748,000 from £50,195,000 to £16,447,000 mainly due to the re-ordering of appropriation in aid provision between certain subheads to reflect a better classification of receipts.

Waveney district council

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take against Waveney district council following the issue of a notice under part I of the Local Government Act 1988 on 24 July 1991 in respect of building cleaning work.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has given careful consideration the response which Waveney district council has made to the notice served on the authority on 24 July 1991, and has today given a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 in respect of their building cleaning work. The effect of this direction is to preclude the authority from carrying out building cleaning work after 31 March 1993.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) those authorities whose expenditure servicing capital exceeds the relevant forecast standard spending assessment for the year 1991-92, stating for each that figure, the amount actually spent and the deficit as a percentage of that sum and (b) a second, or integrated, list of those authorities likely to be in that category for the year 1992-93 together with the relevant standard spending assessment estimated expenditure and percentage deficit.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 14 May 1992]: The information requested for 1991-92 has been placed in the Library. It is not yet possible to produce comparable figures for 1992-93.

Mortgage Rescue Schemes

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 238-39, if he will make a statement following his meeting with the Council of Mortgage Lenders on 2 June; and what is his latest estimate of the number of households (a) assisted to date and (b) likely to be assisted in the whole of 1992 by mortgage rescue schemes initiated by members of the Council of Mortgage Lenders as part of the package agreed in December 1991.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 June 1992]: Ministers met mortgage lenders yesterday to review progress on tackling repossessions. They were encouraged to hear the lenders' assessment that repossessions in 1992 will be significantly lower than they would have been without the package of measures announced by the Chancellor last December.

The Council of Mortgage Lenders estimates that measures taken since December will save some 55,000 repossessions this year: 40,000 as a result of new procedures for dealing with arrears cases; and 15,000 as a result of the direct payment to lenders of the mortgage interest element of income support.

The Government welcome the lenders' recognition that further efforts are necessary to tackle the arrears and repossessions problem. It agrees that lenders should continue to look at the whole range of options available for addressing this problem, including formal mortgage to rent schemes, shared equity arrangements and more generous repayment terms.

The Government continue to regard the level of repossessions as an important issue and will follow closely the progress lenders are making in tackling it.

WALES

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to make a statement concerning the provisional revenue support grant for the year 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 22 May to the hon. Member for Clwyd, North-West (Mr. Richards) at column 277.

Block Release

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) males and (b) females were on day or block release in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Figures for higher education corporations, voluntary colleges, and further education institutions maintained by local education authorities are given in the following table for the year 1990-91. Comparable information is not available for the University of Wales as students on part-time courses are not enrolled as day release or block release.

Students enrolled on part-time day/block release courses

	Number
Males	19,121
Females	8,054

Child Care

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of (a) up to two year-olds and (b) over three year-olds are currently in publicly-funded child care places in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information held centrally relates to children under 5. The numbers of publicly funded child care places in Wales at 31 March 1991 are shown in the following table:

	Full day care	Sessional care
Provided by the local authority	275	275
Children in private or voluntary facilities paid for by the local authority	211	731
	486	1,006
Rate per 1,000 population aged 0-4	2·5	5·3

Queensferry School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has under the heading of capital allocations to enable the replacement of Queensferry county primary school, Deeside, Clwyd, to be built by the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: The statutory responsibility for the provision, repair and maintenance of school buildings rests with the local education authority. It is for Clwyd county council to determine its own priorities for capital spending between the various services from within the resources at its disposal as well as on the projects within those services in the light of its own assessment of needs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will visit Queensferry county primary school;

(2) if he will meet the staff and governors of Queensferry county primary school;

(3) if he will meet the parent teacher association of Queensferry county primary school.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

Council Tax

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his proposals for the payment of grant in respect of council tax preparation costs incurred by billing authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today laid before the House the special grant report for 1992-93 which sets out my proposals for the payment of grant towards the revenue cost of implementing the council tax. The report sets out grant allocations to individual billing authorities and the conditions that I intend to impose on the payment of grant. A copy of the report is being sent to all local authorities in Wales today.

I have also made credit approvals available to billing authorities to cover the estimated capital cost of preparation work.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any changes will be made to the cash limits of his Department in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 8 will be increased by £5,447,000, from £1,265,078,000 to £1,270,525,000.

This increase allows for an additional £4,941,000 to help provide, from 1 April 1992, for the pay awards recommended by the Reports of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine, and on doctors' and dentists' remuneration, as announced on 10 February 1992. The increase also covers a transfer of £506,000 from class XIII, vote 1 for the cost of Welsh patients treated in spinal injury units.

The £4,941,000 for the pay awards recommendations will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Career Development Loans

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales the total amount of money which has been allocated in career development loans in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and how much has been allocated to (a) males and (b) females.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply. The total value of the loans issued in Wales during the year ending 31 March 1992 was £1,048,280—£655,156 for males and £393,124 for females.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Promotional Material

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what colours were used on the Industrial Development Board's promotional material in the May edition of the German magazine, "Automobil Produktion"; what is his policy on using the colours of the Republic of Ireland's flag in such material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Due to a mistake admitted by the German publisher, the colours orange, white and green were used in the IDB's promotional supplement in the German automotive magazine. Fewer than 40 copies of the magazine were distributed, and the publisher has undertaken to remove the colours and reprint the supplement at his own expense before general circulation to the German automotive industry. It is not the policy of the IDB to use the national colours of the Republic of Ireland in any of its promotional literature.

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Anglo-Irish secretariat at Maryfield is operational during the present inter-party talks at Stormont; what is its function; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The British and Irish Governments announced at an Intergovernmental

Conference on 27 April that no further meetings of the conference would be held before the week beginning 27 July. As envisaged in the statement of 26 March 1991, the secretariat at Maryfield is accordingly not required for that period to discharge its normal role of servicing conference meetings provided for in article 3 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, and is not doing so.

Compensation Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a business plan for the Compensation Agency will be published.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Compensation Agency's business plan for 1992-93 will be published today. The plan explains the agency's business and organisation and sets out assumptions about work loads and resources which underpin the plans and targets identified for the agency this year. I have made arrangements for copies to be placed in the library.

Emergency Provisions Act

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects Lord Colville's report on the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991 to be available.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses today.

Consultants Fees

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total sum paid out in fees by his Department to management consultants in 1979-80 and in each following year up to and including 1991-92; and what is his estimate for 1992-93.

Mr. Mates: The information for 1979-80 to 1983-84 is only available at disproportionate cost. Information for the years 1984-85 onwards is as follows:

1984-85	2,352,311
1985-86	2,427,200
1986-87	2,742,192
1987-88	3,363,213
1988-89	4,260,116
1989-90	4,835,757
1990-91	4,239,223
1991-92	4,246,115
1992-93	[1]5,368,383

[1] Estimate.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims have been made for disability living allowances and attendance allowance for each month since February.

Mr. Scott: The latest available figures for claims[1] registered for disability living allowance were:

	Number
February	72,407
March	123,985
April	67,888
TOTAL	264,280

[1] These numbers include new claims, "top-up" claims from existing recipients of attendance allowance and mobility allowance and claims made on the grounds of terminal illness.

The latest available figures for claims received for attendance allowance were:

	Number
February	59,871
March	71,084
April	51,816
TOTAL	182,771

Benefit Claims

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for social fund loans in the London borough of Lambeth were refused on the grounds of inability to pay; and if he will show this figure as a percentage of all applications for loans in Lambeth.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Respite Care

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake a survey to discover the number of people who are in receipt of respite care.

Mr. Burt: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 15 May at columns 223-24. As no distinction is made in the level of income support paid between temporary and permanent residence in a residential care or nursing home, there would be no advantage for social security purposes in collecting such data and it would not justify the cost involved.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide further assistance to citizens advice bureaux to enable the staff to deal with applications for disability living allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have worked closely with the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and other organisations of and for disabled people on the introduction of disability living allowance and disability working allowance and the new claims process for attendance allowance. As part of our continuing commitment to help staff in citizens advice bureaux provide advice and information, we have offered suggestions on the training material and guidance NACAB issued to all its CABs and provided them with free copies of the disability handbook, as well as arranging for every individual citizens advice bureaux to hold stocks of the claim packs. We have also helped to fund the purchase of the Sweet and Maxwell guide on the new disability benefits.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take such action as necessary to simplify forms DLA 1(A) and DLA 2(A) relating to disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The introduction of the new claims process for disability living allowance has been widely welcomed by disabled people and their organisations. Indeed, they were both closely involved in developing and testing the claim pack DLA 1(A). Nevertheless, we are closely monitoring the effectiveness of the claim pack and are currently undertaking a review of the current draft and are making improvements where necessary to ensure that it continues to be as user-friendly as possible.

Correspondence

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Birkenhead on behalf of his constituent Mr. M. Ritchie of 11 Highfield crescent, Birkenhead, on his claim for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: There is no record of any correspondence from the hon. Member to Ministers concerning his constituent's claim. However, I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the hon. Member recently wrote direct to the mobility allowance unit concerning this matter, and a reply was sent to him on 1 June 1992.

European Senior's Pass

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made towards securing agreement across EC member states on the adoption of the European senior's pass.

Miss Widdecombe: It has not yet been possible to secure Communitywide agreement to the adoption of the EC over, 60s card. No member state has yet implemented the card and officials are continuing their discussions with their counterparts in the Commission and other member states in an effort to resolve outstanding problems.

Pensioners Living Overseas

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what recent discussions have been held between officials from his Department and representatives of the Australian Government concerning the uprating of pensions paid to British pensioners residing in Australia;

(2) if he will make a statement on the recent meetings held in Canberra between representatives of the Australian Government, and officials from his Department on arrangements for the payment of pensions to British pensioners residing in Australia.

Miss Widdecombe: Officials of the Department met their counterparts from the Australian Department of Social Security in October 1991 and in March 1992 to discuss issues relating to pensions paid to United Kingdom pensioners living in Australia. In view of the substantial costs involved, the Government are unable to make any commitment, at this stage, to change their policy of not uprating pensions paid to British pensioners living in Australia.

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy on the payment of pensions to British pensioners living overseas in countries with which there is no reciprocal social security agreement.

Miss Widdecombe: British pensioners living abroad in countries, outside the European Community, with which the United Kingdom does not have a reciprocal social security agreement providing for annual upratings of benefit receive their state retirement pensions at the rate current when they left this country or when they became entitled if they were living abroad at the time.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claims for attendance allowance on grounds of terminal illness were received in the first three months of 1992; how many of these claims are still outstanding; what was the average length of time taken to process successful claims; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many claims for attendance allowance were received in the first three months of 1992; how many of these claims are still outstanding; what was the average length of time taken to process successful claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Pursuant to my reply of 12 May, at column 100, I regret that the following information was incorrect:

A total of 164,412 claims for attendance allowance were received in the first three months of this year. The number of these claims made on the grounds of terminal illness is not available.

The correct information is as follows:

A total of 185,596 claims for attendance allowance were received in the first three months of this year. The number of these claims made on the grounds of terminal illness is 21,184.

EDUCATION

Voluntary-aided Schools

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications for voluntary-aided status have been received from (a) Anglican schools, (b) Catholic schools, (c) Jewish schools and (d) Muslim schools since 1979; and how many applications in each category have been granted.

Mr. Forth: The complete information requested is not readily available. The following table gives the information requested in respect of applications decided since November 1988 and includes one lapsed application in respect of a Muslim school. This excludes schools formed by the amalgamation of existing voluntary schools.

	Number of applications	Number approved
Church of England	6	2
Church of England/Methodist	2	1
Roman Catholic	7	4
Jewish	4	2
Muslim	2	0

School Governors

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what efforts are being undertaken by his Department to ensure that women are granted adequate training and have equality of access to be selected as school governors.

Mr. Forth: Women have equal opportunity to become school governors and the majority of school governors —53 per cent.—are women. The same training opportunities are open to all governors.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to establish mechanisms to ensure that equal opportunities issues are taken into account as part of the school inspection strategy.

Mr. Forth: The detailed arrangements for school inspections under the Education (Schools) Act 1992 will be a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspectors for schools.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time equivalent academic staff are employed at (a) each institution funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council and (b) each institution funded by the Universities Funding Council; and how many students are enrolled at each.

Mr. Forman: Numbers of full-time equivalent academic staff and students in each institution funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council are given in table G6 of the "Annual Monitoring Survey of Further and Higher Education Student:Staff Ratios—Academic Year 1989-90—Interim Report" published by the Department of Education and Science and lodged in the Library.

Numbers of full-time and part-time academic staff and students in each institution funded by the Universities Funding Council are given in tables 14, 15 and 31 of "University Statistics 1989-90—Volume One: Students and Staff" published by the Universities' Statistical Record and lodged in the Library.

Polytechnic Staff

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the percentage change in real terms of the salaries of academic staff in polytechnics between 1979 and 1991.

Mr. Forman: The percentage change in real terms of the salaries of academic staff in polytechnics between 1979 and 1990 was 24·2 per cent. Information for 1991 is not yet available.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time staff there were in institutions funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, or its earlier equivalent, in 1979 and at the last count.

Mr. Forman: The Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council annual record of staff and students shows that 58,283 full-time equivalent staff were in institutions funded by the council in academic year 1990-91, the latest year for which data are available.

The PCFC was established in 1989. Comparable data for 1979 are not available for the institutions currently funded by the PCFC.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has any changes to announce to cash limits on Votes within his responsibility for 1992-93.

Mr. Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XI, vote 1, Schools, research and miscellaneous services, will be increased by £50,000 from £766,485,000 to £766,535,000.

The increase represents the transfer from the Home Office of £50,000 from the Government seized assets fund for educational projects in connection with drug abuse. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

European Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the outcome of the meeting of the EC Education Ministers in Luxembourg on Monday 1 June.

Mr. Patten: I attended the meeting on Monday 1 June of the Council and the Ministers for Education meeting within the Council, together with the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Higher Education. The Council and the Ministers adopted conclusions on the development of environmental education and open and distance learning; and the Council adopted conclusions on the evaluation of future Community programmes concerning education and training. The Council and the Ministers discussed issues arising from the implementation of the LINGUA programme and the proposed amendment of the convention defining the statute of the European schools.

HEALTH

Home Helps

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the provisions obliging local authority social services departments to provide home help services to all elderly people in their area who are in need of such services.

Mr. Yeo: The statutory basis for the provision of home help service to elderly people is contained in the following legislation:

Section 29 of the National Assistance Act 1948;

Section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970;

Section 45 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968;

Section 21 and Schedule 8 of the National Health Service Act 1977.

Dentists

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 12 May, Official Report, column 85, whether the Health Department and the general dental services committee have now reconsidered the appropriate fee scale for 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold), on 2 June at columns 466-67.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any changes will be made to the cash limits and running cost limit of her Department in 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 1 (hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, England) will be increased by £20,190,000 (from £18,544,309,000 to £18,564,499,000). This increase allows for an additional £76,258,000 to help provide, from 1 April 1992, for the pay awards recommended by the reports of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine, and on doctors' and dentists' remuneration, as announced on 10 February 1992. This is partly offset by transfers of £49,562,000 to class XIII, vote 4, (family health services (part) and NHS trusts' external financing etc., England), reflecting an increase in the NHS trusts' aggregate external financing limit; £6,000,000 to class XIII, vote 3 (see below) for payments to and on behalf of recipients of blood and tissue infected with HIV and £506,000 to class XVI, vote 8 (hospital, community health, family health services (part) and related services, Wales) for Welsh patients treated in spinal injury units. The remainder will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit for class XIII, vote 3 (Department of Health, administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England) will be increased by £21,428,000 (from £801,053,000 to £822,481,000). These increases provide for £14,936,000 for the Department's London accommodation strategy; £742,000 to meet, from 1 April 1992, the review body recommendations mentioned above and £6,000,000 from class XIII, vote 1 for payments to and on behalf of recipients of blood and tissue infected with HIV. These are partly offset by a transfer of £250,000 to the Department of Social Security national insurance fund for the Stillbirth (Definition) Bill, while the remainder will be charged to the reserve.

The Department's gross running cost limit control is increased by £1,851,000 from £267,385,000 to £269,236,000.

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any changes to announce to the running cost limit for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for 1992-93.

Mr. Sackville: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the running cost limit for class XIII, vote 6 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys) will be increased by £261,000 from £45,741,000 to £46,002,000. This reflects an increase in running costs provision of £96,000 in the national health central register area for additional services to the family health service central unit, and £165,000 for the childhood cancer birth linkage study. The increases will be matched by an increase in appropriations in aid and will be met from within the existing resources of the Department of Health (class XIII, vote 3).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Offences (Statistics)

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offences were recorded in the latest year for which figures are available, by people who were on bail at the time those offences were committed.

Mr. Jack: The information as requested is not available. The Home Office is discussing with the police, through the ACPO crime committee, how best to ensure the regular collection of data from police forces on offences committed by people on bail. Home Office research and planning unit paper 65 "Offending while on bail: a survey of recent studies", which is in the Library, gives estimates of the rate of offending by people on bail and of the number of offences committed.

Immigration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress which Her Majesty's Government hope to make, and the goals which they hope to achieve, during their presidency of the European Communities, as regards the work programme on migration policy set out in the report from the Ministers responsible for immigration to the European Council meeting in Maastricht on immigration and asylum policy dated 3 December 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We are fully committed to carrying forward the work programme during the United Kingdom presidency, and are currently considering to what aspects of it we should give priority. We will reach final decisions in the light of the ministerial discussions at the conclusion of the Portuguese presidency.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made so far under the Portuguese presidency of the European Communities as regards the work programme on migration policy set out in the report from Ministers responsible for immigration to the European Council meeting on immigration and asylum policy on 3 December 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Discussions have been held under the Portuguese presidency on a number of matters which are included in the work programme adopted by EC Ministers concerned with immigration in December 1991 and subsequently approved by the European Council.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Her Majesty's Government intend to sign the convention applying the Schengen agreement of 14 June 1985 between the governments of the states of the Benelux economic union, the Federal Republic of Germany, and the French Republic on the gradual abolition of checks at their common borders.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Departmental Expenditure

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to his Department's running costs limits.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To reflect a number of machinery of government changes affecting my Department, the Home Office running costs limit will be reduced by £588,000, from £1,450,608,000 to £1,450,020,000.

Young Offenders

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the number of (a) juveniles and (b) young adult offenders in Feltham young offenders institution who, at the end of the week ending 1 May 1992, had been on remand for (a) more than three months, (b) more than six months and (c) more than one year;

(2) how many (a) juveniles and (b) young adult offenders in Feltham young offenders institution on the latest date for which figures are available had been on remand for (i) between one and two weeks, (ii) between two weeks and one month, (iii) between one and three months, (iv) between three and six months, (v) between six and nine months, (vi) between nine months and one year and (vii) over one year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 May 1992]: The information requested is not recorded centrally. The latest readily available information is for 31 March 1992 and is given in the table.

Untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners aged under 21 held in Feltham on 31 March 1992: by age group and length of time since first reception into a Prison Service establishment[1]

Prostitution

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions for soliciting for immoral purposes were issued in the Portswood division of the Hampshire Constabulary in 1990 and 1991; how many were successful; and what was the average fine;

(2) how many cautions for kerb crawling were successfully undertaken by the Portswood division of the Hampshire Constabulary in 1990 and in 1991; and how many were issued to people living (a) in the city of Southampton, (b) the rest of Hampshire and (c) other places;

(3) how many prosecutions for kerb crawling were successfully undertaken by the Portswood division of the Hampshire Constabulary in 1990 and 1991; and how many of those prosecuted lived in (a) the city of Southampton, (b) the rest of Hampshire and (c) other places.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 22 May 1992]: Information available centrally, relates only to the court proceedings for Southampton and other petty sessional divisions in Hampshire and to cautions for the whole of Hampshire police force area. Information for 1991 is not yet available.

No males were prosecuted for soliciting in Southampton petty sessional division in either 1989 or 1990. There was only one prosecution for kerb-crawling in 1989 and none in 1990. The person was acquitted.

Information on kerb crawling for Hampshire police force area and England and Wales is given in the attached table below.

PRIME MINISTER

Friendly Fire Incident

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how and when he discovered the names of the American pilots involved in the friendly fire incident in the Gulf war; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I do not know, nor do I believe it necessary for me to know, the names of the pilots.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any proposals to change the 1992-93 running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: Other Services Vote.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the running costs limit for the Cabinet Office: other services (class XIX, vote 2) will be reduced by £2,482,000 from £22,892,000 to £20,410,000. This reflects the machinery of government changes announced after the general election.

Dalai Lama

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to encourage the Chinese authorities to facilitate a visit by the Dalai Lama to Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 June 1992]: We continue to urge the Chinese Government to start a dialogue with the Tibetan people, including the Dalai Lama. We hope that such a dialogue would open the way for the Dalai Lama to return to Tibet.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what efforts have been made by her Department to ensure equality of access to training programmes for both men and women.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) have a contractual requirement to ensure equality of opportunity in all their activities. TECs have flexibility to tailor training to meet individuals' needs in both content and delivery, both to ensure equality of opportunity and so that people may continue to meet their domestic commitments while training. Furthermore, they are required to pay necessary child care costs to those in the employment training and youth training guarantee groups.

Equality of training opportunity will be recognised and encouraged by a new national training award recently introduced to be awarded for the training of women.

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to ensure that the Health and Safety Commission produces bilingual leaflets and posters for mass distribution within Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: Decisions on the publication of guidance on health and safety in languages other than English are for the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) and Health and Safety Executive (HSE). They are very conscious of the needs of Welsh speakers and are seeking to improve the services they provide to Welsh speakers in Wales.

A Welsh language version of the poster, "Health and Safety Law—What You Should Know", and three leaflets in the agricultural series are already available in Welsh.

The development of HSC's and HSE's policy on Welsh language will naturally take into account the measures to be enacted in the new Welsh Language Bill which was announced in the Queen's speech.

Employment Protection

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to extend equal employment protection to part-time workers and to institute pro rata benefits for women and men in part-time work.

Mr. McLoughlin: Many important rights—including those relating to sex and race discrimination, trade union membership/non-membership and health and safety—already apply equally to all employees, irrespective of hours of work. All union members also have important statutory protections against misuse of union powers. Extending all employment protection rights to employees regardless of their hours of work or on a pro rata basis, however, would place excessive burdens on employers and reduce opportunities for part-time work.

Women Workers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by her Department to encourage the employment of women returners.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is for women themselves to choose whether or not to return to work, but my colleagues and I take every opportunity to encourage employers to adopt working arrangements which allow all parents to balance their employment and family responsibilities. These include flexible hours and holidays, job sharing, career breaks, part-time working and, where appropriate, help with child care. Many employment service and training and enterprise council programmes have inbuilt flexibility which benefits women returners. Our commitment to encouraging more out of school and holiday child care schemes will particularly benefit women who wish to resume work when their children start school.

Equal Pay

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to ensure that the equal value regulations of the Equal Pay Act 1970 are implemented in full.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Equal Pay (Amendment) Regulations 1983 have been fully in operation since 1 January 1984.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to revise the Equal Pay Act 1970 to ensure that women in sex-segregated industries are not prevented from benefiting from the Act.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Equal Pay Act 1970, as amended, provides that a woman who is employed on like work, work rated as equivalent under a job evaluation study, or work of equal value, to a man employed by the same or an associated employer is entitled to equality with him in the terms of her contract of employment. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to extend the scope of the Act in the way suggested.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to assist the pursuit of equal pay claims by women employees through taking steps to minimise the expenses incurred by the claimant and the delays in application.

Mr. McLoughlin: Industrial tribunals are intended to provide a cheap, speedy and relatively informal means of resolving disputes arising out of the employment relationship, including the Equal Pay Act. In consequence under part IV of the Legal Aid Act 1988, legal aid is not available for representation before industrial tribunals. However, according to an applicant's financial circumstances he or she may be able to obtain from a solicitor, without cost, legal advice and assistance with preparation of an application to an industrial tribunal.

The Equal Opportunities Commission has made a number of recommendations for changes to the Equal Pay Act 1970 some of which, the commission states, will reduce the time taken to deal with equal value applications. These recommendations are currently under consideration.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the funds allocated for political education purposes for the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no such plans. The Equal Opportunities Commission receives grant in aid from the Government to work toward the elimination of discrimination, to promote equality of opportunity between men and women generally, and to keep under review the working of the Equal Pay and Sex Discrimination Acts.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time spent by the chairmen of the training and enterprise councils in their posts; and if she will make a statement on the length of time she expects chairmen to serve.

Mr. McLoughlin: Less than one third of TECs have had a change of chairman since becoming operational. It would therefore be inappropriate at this stage to calculate an average length of time that individuals spend as TEC chairmen.

As long as an individual remains eligible for the position of TEC chairman, there is no present length of service expected.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, following the House of Lords decision in Delaney v. Staples, she will now introduce regulations to extend the jurisdiction of industrial tribunals.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 22 May 1992, Official Report, col. 347.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any changes will be made to her Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1992-93.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the following changes will be made:

The running costs provision for class VI, vote 1 will be decreased by £1,378,000 from £329,474,000 to £328,096,000 changing the departmental running costs limits from £1,206,423,000 to £1,205,045,000. This change is the net effect of transfers to the Department of Trade and Industry (class IV, vote 2) and the Department of National Heritage (class XII, vote 4), and transfers from the Home Office (class IX, vote 3) and the Cabinet Office (class XIX, vote 2), reflecting the transfers of various responsibilities between these Departments and my own.

SCOTLAND

Quarry, Elderslie

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the proposal to develop a quarry at Windyhill farm, Elderslie.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The hon. Member wrote to my hon. Friend on this matter on 2 August 1991. A reply to that letter was sent on 21 August. No other representations have been made.

Council Tax

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends residences not fit for human habitation, as defined in Wylmac v. Community Charges Registration Officer, Strathclyde, to be subject to local council tax.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I intend to make an order shortly, under the Local Government Finance Act 1992, which will define those dwellings which will be exempt from the council tax. As far as dwellings such as that which was the subject of Wylmac v. Community Charges Registration Officer, Strathclyde, are concerned, it is our intention to exempt from the council tax those which would currently be exempt from the standard community charge.

Football Grounds

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there is to be a reconsideration of the present policy towards all-seated requirement at Scottish Football League grounds.

Mr. Lang: The Government keep under continual scrutiny the safety of sports grounds. In recent months, we have geen examining the all-seated requirement for those Scottish Football League clubs with grounds designated in terms of the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975 as being capable of holding more than 10,000 spectators.

We have decided that it would be wrong to review either the principle or the timetable for all-seated grounds in the Scottish Premier League or at Hampden Park and Murrayfield. It is essential that those major Scottish grounds should be all-seated, bearing in mind the large attendance frequently attracted to those grounds. It is also essential that our top football clubs meet the all-seated standards necessary to compete in Europe and make full use of the resources available to them to provide grounds to a standard of which we can all be proud.

However, there may be circumstances in which standing accommodation can be retained at those first and second division grounds presently required to become all-seated, where average attendances are very low in relation to actual ground capacity. Representations will be invited shortly from a number of interested organisations in a review of all-seated policy for those grounds. No changes in policy will be made unless the Government are satisfied about the safety implications of allowing limited standing accommodation to remain at those smaller grounds.

I will make a further announcement as soon as possible.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make any changes to the cash limits for 1992-93 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, I intend to make changes to three cash limits:

(a) The cash limit for class XV, vote 13: education, arts and libraries, Scotland, will be increased by £1,250,000 from £259,024,000 to £260,274,000. The increase in provision is required to fund further improvements to Hampden Park. This increase is offset by a reduction in the SO/LA2 cash block.

(b) The cash limit for class XV, vote 20, revenue and rate support grants, Scotland will be increased by £47,700,000 from £3,458,500,000 to £3,506,200,000. £41,000,000 of this increase in provision will fund an additional reduction in non-domestic rates poundages as a further step in the Government's united business rates policy. The remaining £6,700,000 is an increase to local authorities in Scotland following an addition to the amounts being distributed to local authorities in England and Wales.

(c) The cash limit for class XV, vote 25: hospital, community health, family health (part) and other health services, Scotland, will be increased by £10,800,000 from £2,590,645,000 to £2,601,445,000. The increase is required to provide £11,000,000 towards the costs of the pay awards recommended in the reports of the review bodies for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine, and on doctors' and dentists' remuneration (Cm. 1811, 1812 and 1813) and £1,800,000 to cover the costs of a scheme of payments for patients who contracted HIV through blood or tissue transfer. The increases are partially offset by a reduction of £2,000,000 in respect of rephasing of health board banking arrangements.

(d) In addition, the cash block SO/LA2, which covers net capital allocation to local authorities and new town net capital expenditure, will be reduced by £4,052,000 from £272,033,000 to £267,981,000. This will partly offset increases in other cash limits.

All the increases mentioned will be offset by savings or charged to the reserve and therefore will not increase the planned total of public expenditure.

Local Government Pensions

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual pension paid to retired local government officers in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: For the year ending 31 March 1991, the average annual pension, including increases in line with movements in the retail prices index, paid to retired local government officers under the local government superannuation scheme was £2,014. More up-to-date information from the local authorities which administer the pension scheme is not yet available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Marks

Mr. Mills: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he will introduce legislation to implement the EC directive on trade marks;

(2) what representations he has received on the consequences of not introducing legislation to implement the EC directive on trade marks by the end of 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend has received various representations on the need to implement the EC directive on trade marks by primary legislation. Thirty letters were received last autumn and more recently Sir John M. Banham, the Director general of the CBI, Mr. Christopher Morcom QC and Mr. Richard C. Abnett, the President of the Institute of Trade Mark Agents wrote. However, as my hon. Friend is aware, pressure of parliamentary time made it impossible to include the Trade Marks Bill in the legislative programme set out in the Gracious Speech.

We are now reviewing the available options for implementing the EC directive. I am not yet in a position to make a statement.

Recycled Feedstock

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he intends to encourage greater procurement of tissue product using recycled feedstock by Government Departments and public bodies.

Mr. Leigh: The 1990 White Paper on the Environment —"This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200)—and the first year report (Cm 1655) affirmed the Government's commitment to favouring recycled products where they are available of adequate quality and where they represent value for money. This message was reinforced in the Government's environmental action guide for building and purchasing managers, which was published in August 1991. All Government Departments are looking to develop strategies to improve their environmental housekeeping by the end of 1992; this may well lead to further increases in the procurement of recycled products, including tissue products, by Government Departments.

Power Lines

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what guidance he has issued or discussions he has had with the electricity companies to limit deaths and injury to birds by overhead power lines;

(2) whether any specific guidance notes are issued for marking power lines that cross estuaries, creeks and wetland habitats.

Mr. Eggar: Electricity companies when formulating overhead power line proposals have a statutory duty towards the environment which includes taking account of any wildlife in the area concerned. Where consultation with local interests shows the possibility of danger to birds, the fitting of bird diverters may be agreed by the company or otherwise may be imposed as a condition if consent for the line is granted.

Marine VHF Radio

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many prosecutions there were in 1991 for unlicensed marine very high frequency sets.

Mr. Leigh: During 1991, seven people were prosecuted for the unlicensed use of marine very high frequency equipment.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of officials and type of craft used by his Department to enforce very high frequency marine radio licences and the areas they cover.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's Radiocommunications Agency has 97 field officers deployed around the United Kingdom who are responsible for the enforcement of the Wireless Telegraphy Acts, including the licensing of marine very high frequency radio equipment. The officers have five rigid inflatable boats for this work.

Communications Agency

Mr. Fraser: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the terms of reference of the radio investigator service of the Communications Agency.

Mr. Leigh: The objective of my Department's Radiocommunications Agency's radio investigation service is to ensure that authorised radio users can operate without undue interference. The RIS priorities are to tackle interference which could endanger lives and to help those whose business operations are disrupted as a result of interference. After these priorities have been met, the RIS deals with other interference complaints.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Benign Energy Sources

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the total investment planned to develop (a) coppicing and (b) other benign energy sources.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry new and renewable energy programme expects to invest £24·3 million in 1992-93, of which £2·6 million is directly attributable to biofuels, including £547,000 for work on short rotation arable coppice. Complementary work on miscanthus, another energy crop, costing £45,000, is being funded by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Relocation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants in his Department he is considering for relocation from headquarters buildings; and if he will list the areas currently under consideration for relocation.

Mr. Eggar: The Radiocommunications Agency of the DTI is currently considering the possibility of relocating 350 staff from its offices at Waterloo to docklands.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place with the trade unions in respect of relocation of civil servants from his Department's headquarters buildings.

Mr. Eggar: The trade union side has been consulted and kept informed about the progress of the Department's programme of relocation reviews. They have been closely involved in discussions about relocation and are currently involved in discussions with the Radiocommunications Agency about the planned move to docklands.

Telecommunications Act

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he has yet received a report by the Director of Telecommunications for the year 1991 as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes. The eighth report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1991. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limit and running costs limit for 1992-93.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class V, vote 3 (administration) will be increased by £32,000 from £43,263,000 to £43,295,000 in respect of a transfer for statistical surveys from the Central Statistical Office. The running cost limit for the Department of Trade and Industry will be increased by £40,719,000 from £264,643,000 to £305,362,000 being the total of the running costs amounts on class IV yote 2 and Class V vote 3 after machinery of government changes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations or actions Her Majesty's Government have made or taken to stop the slaughter in the Sudan whether by terrorism or famine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned at the continuing loss of life in Sudan.

We have been one of the main bilateral food aid donors to Sudan, providing over £46 million worth of emergency humanitarian assistance—both bilaterally and through the EC's emergency aid programme—since the present food crisis began in November 1990. This figure includes 71,000 tonnes of bilateral food aid. We have pledged a further 27,000 tonnes in response to this year's appeal by the UN special emergency programme for the Horn of Africa. We have also played a leading part in efforts by the international donor community to ensure that relief is effectively provided throughout the country.

We have regularly made our views on terrorism plain to the Sudanese Government, particularly in connection with the release from prison last year of those responsible for the Acropole Hotel bombing in 1988, in which five Britons died. We have also stressed that we would regard it as unacceptable if Sudan were to provide support for terrorist groups.

Bougainville

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards independence for Bougainville; and what help Her Majesty's Government are giving Bougainville in the aftermath of the damage to the environment by copper mining.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government regard Bougainville as an integral part of Papua New Guinea and views the Bougainville problem as an internal matter of Papua New Guinea. We are not aware that the Papua New Guinea Government is seeking any help from foreign governments in connection with copper mining on its territory.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government is providing to Cambodia for its mine-clearing programme.

Mr. Goodlad: The UN transitional authority in Cambodia's mine clearance training unit is led by a British commander supported by 10 other personnel. The United Kingdom is also contributing financially to the mine clearance training programme through payment of our assessed contribution—6·1 per cent.—to the costs of UNTAC. We have given the HALO Trust, a British non-governmental organisation working in Cambodia, £60,000 to help its mine survey work in Cambodia on behalf of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees.

TRANSPORT

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the increase in carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen discharges to the atmosphere that would result in the United Kingdom from the upper projections of road traffic in his Department's White Paper "Roads to Prosperity".

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Forecasts of emissions of carbon dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from road traffic sources are currently being prepared and will be published in due course. The actual increases in emissions will depend on the success of the Government's policies to increase fuel efficiency and cut gaseous emissions as well as other factors such as economic growth, levels of road congestion and changing patterns of land use. Tigher controls on the amount of oxides of nitrogen which can be emitted by vehicles have been agreed in the European Community. There is also considerable scope for improving the fuel efficiency of vehicles, which will lower the emission of carbon dioxide. We are examining ways of encouraging improvements in fuel efficiency with our partners in the European Community.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when is his Department's preferred route for the M56 to M62 section of Greater Manchester western and northern relief road to be announced.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I cannot give a firm date. Preferred route announcement would follow consideration of the consultation response.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to ensure that there will be no reduction in the quality or frequency of any rail service, subsequent to sale of any relevant part of the network to private operators.

Mr. Freeman: We will be announcing our proposals in due course. They will be directed towards improving services for passengers and freight customers.

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate for the total cost of extending the Jubilee line.

Mr. Norris: The latest approved estimate of the total cost of extending the Jubilee line is £1·5 billion, at June 1990 prices.

Great Crested Newts

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he is taking to protect the population of great crested newts, Triturus Cristatus, at Bamfield, Cambridgeshire; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from Dr. Clive Cummins relating to great crested newts; and what response he has sent.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following receipt of Dr. Cummins' letter of 5 February 1992, consultants dealing with environmental issues arising from the upgrading of the A1 to motorway between Alconbury and Peterborough, were instructed to carry out further site investigation. They have confirmed that Barnfield pond, which is in the garden of a private house adjacent to the A1, contains a number of great crested newts. English Nature will now be consulted before deciding appropriate action. A reply to Dr. Cummins' further letter of 14 May 1992 will be sent shortly.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been expended by his Department in the London Docklands development corporation area from the date of its inception until the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Norris: The Department's capital expenditure in docklands between these dates was as follows:

	£ million
Docklands light railway	229·5
Improvements on the A13	14·5

Relocation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants in his Department he is considering for relocation from headquarters buildings; and if he will list the areas currently under consideration for relocation.

Mr. MacGregor: Up to 50 posts in the Department's London docklands division will move to docklands shortly, about 220 central services posts will move to Hastings by April 1993 and 250 marine directorate posts will move to Southampton in May 1993.

A review of the case for relocating from London over 500 posts in the highways, safety and traffic command is in progress; and consultants will be reporting on the Department's headquarters accommodation needs and options for meeting them. Decisions about future accommodation requirements and locations will be taken after the completion of these studies later this year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place with the trades unions in respect of relocation of civil servants from his Department's headquarters buildings.

Mr. MacGregor: Officials have twice met the Department of Transport's trade union side—TUS—to discuss headquarters accommodation and relocation following the decision to demolish 2 Marsham street. The TUS was consulted about the draft terms of reference for a study by consultants of future accommodation needs in London and options.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Energy Efficiency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce fiscal instruments to encourage energy-efficient investments.

Mr. Dorrell: The existing tax regime already gives relief for capital investment by businesses on equipment, including energy efficient products. By providing a broadly neutral tax system for businesses, with a common rate of capital allowances for investment in equipment, we allow businesses to decide where their money is best spent. Fuel savings provide the best incentive for businesses to make energy-efficient investments.

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the Treasury's running costs limits in 1992-93.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury's running costs limit for 1992-93 is being increased by £1,290,000 from £90,913,000 to £92,203,000. This increase reflects the net effect of staff and functions transferred to the Treasury from the Department of Trade and Industry, and from the Treasury to the Cabinet Office—OPPS. This change will be reflected in a token supplementary estimate which will be presented for parliamentary approval in due course.

DEFENCE

RAF Logistics

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of Royal Air Force Logistics.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am today able to report, as the basis for formal consultation between the Department and the trade unions and other interested parties, the outcome of detailed studies into the structure and location of the RAF Logistics Command. A consultative document is being passed to the local and national trade unions concerned today.

The Government accepted last year the recommendations of the PROSPECT study into the future size and structure of the Ministry of Defence. Central to the study's recommendations was the principle that only a small core headquarters should be retained in London, with the remaining functions being redeployed. For the RAF, the report recommended that the staff of the Air Member for Supply and Organisation should move out of London, and together with associated elements of RAF Support Command, which would be abolished, form a Logistics Command the headquarters of which will be located at the current RAFSC headquarters at Brampton near Huntingdon. The purpose of the studies now completed has been to establish the best long-term locations for the remainder of the staffs affected. Apart from Brampton, these staff are predominantly in London, At Harrogate, RAF High Wycombe, RAF Stanbridge in Bedforshire, and RAF Swanton Morley in Norfolk. The Defence Codification Authority and air technical publications branches in Glasgow were not involved in these studies.

The Logistics Command will comprise three major functional groupings; the maintenance group, which is a defence support agency, and which was not considered in these studies; the group responsible for communications and information systems; and the support management group. The work of all these is underpinned by the technical and computing services provided at RAF Swanton Morley and RAF Stanbridge.

The studies have recommended that to the maximum extent possible the units carrying out these functions should be collocated in the Brampton area. This would make maximum use of the existing headquarters at Brampton, and of the nearby station at RAF Wyton which as a result of planned changes has significant potential for reuse. A crucial consideration was the cost of providing both office accommodation and married quarters for collocated staff. In particular, complete reprovision of the poor quality buildings on the existing Harrogate site would be extremely expensive compared to the smaller degree of new construction and conversion which would be required at Wyton.

If the recommendations of these studies are confirmed following consultation, the initial moves would be of predominantlyy RAF staff from RAF High Wycombe. Subsequent moves out of Harrogate, London, and Swanton Morley would take place over the period 1994 to 1997. RAF Swanton Morley and the MOD site at Harrogate would be released for disposal. These recommendations have been arrived at only after the most exhaustive study of a wide range of options for the future Logistics Command, including nine sites in the north and East Anglian sites.

The Department is very conscious of the difficulties which surround such a large reorganisation. The Ministry of Defence is the largest Government employer in Harrogate, and one of the largest in North and West Yorkshire, and some compulsory redundancy cannot be excluded. Everything possible will be done to avoid or minimise redundancies at all the locations concerned. Staff will where appropriate be transferred at public expense. In addition there are some opportunities for employment in other Government Departments in the areas concerned, and the Ministry of Defence will co-ordinate closely with these Departments to maximise the opportunities. In addition, anyone made redundant will be compensated under the terms of the appropriate pension scheme. They will also be entitled to participate in the Department's counselling and outplacement service.

These recommendations are subject to the full consultative procedures agreed between the Department and the Trade Unions.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards contractor operation of the Atomic Weapons Establishment.

Mr. Aitken: An invitation to tender for the full contractor operation of AWE is being issued today to the four companies who have expressed an interest in carrying out the work. These are British Aerospace, GEC, Rolls-Royce and the Hunting-BRAE consortium.

Cash Limits

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he can announce any changes to the class I limits and running costs limit for 1992-1993.

Mr. Rifkind: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary summer supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:—

Class I cash limits

£,000s

Vote	Current cash limit	Change	Revised cash limit
1	10,576,703	+ 89,454	10,666,157
2	9,593,000	− 202,397	9,390,603
3	1,933,308	− 34,432	1,898,876
4	1,577,000	+ 151,873	1,728,873
5	559,789	− 4,784	555,005

These changes decrease the block defence cash limit slightly by £286,000 from £24,239,800,000 to £24,239,514,000. They reflect the finalisation of the internal costing process and the net effect of transfers between the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments. As was explained in paragraph 7 of the "Introduction to the Class I Estimates" booklet—HC 237-I—presented on 10 March 1992, because of the major changes resulting from the implementation of the new management strategy, the original estimates could not be constructed in the normal way.

The running costs limit is unchanged.

Soviet Warheads

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial arrangements have been made about the package of assistance to the former Soviet Union for the dismantling and transportation of nuclear warheads.

Mr. Aitken: Further to my answer of 9 March, Official Report, column 428, the package of assistance is being provided to the former Soviet Union as a gift. The 1992-93 costs, of which £10 million is being charged to the reserve, will be met from class I, vote 2, subhead H8, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary summer supplementary estimate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Television Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has access to a live television feed of the Chamber of the House in his office; and what is his policy towards providing this facility in hon. Members' offices.

Mr. Newton: In my Whitehall office, I have access to a spur from the feed to the Prime Minister's office.

As regards the possibility of supplying the clean feed to Members' offices, the Select Committee on Broadcasting published a report on this subject at the end of the last Parliament (House of Commons Paper No. 323 of Session 1991-92). The Committee recommended "that the clean feed should be made available for inclusion in the package of television services whose provision in Members' offices is currently under consideration by the other relevant domestic Committees".

As the Broadcasting Committee acknowledged, its proposal requires the approval of the House as a whole. I hope to be in a position to arrange the necessary debate in the not too distant future.

Office Cost Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council on what date he received the report on the office cost allowance from the Top Salaries Review Body.

Mr. Newton: My predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor), received the report on 14 February.

As I have already stated, I hope to be able to inform the House soon about our plans for publication.

Members' Staff

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) how many hon. Members employ (a) none, (b) one, (c) two, (d) three, (e) four and (f) five or more employees from their office costs allowance;

(2) how many hon. Members have not yet given any of their staff a contract of employment; how many individual staff do not have contracts; what action he is taking to ensure contracts are provided; and how many hon. Members have been contacted in order to point out that contracts should be issued.

Mr. Newton: As many Members who were elected for the first time at the recent general election have not yet notified the Fees Office of appointments of staff, any details supplied at this time would not be representative. Fees Office staff, when seeing new Members, are stressing the need for staff to be given contracts of employment and job descriptions.

Procedure Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the outstanding recommendations of the Procedure Committee which have yet to be put before the House and specify, in each case, if he intends to put them to the House for decision.

Mr. Newton: Full details of the work of the Procedure Committee during the last Parliament, including the extent to which its various reports and recommendations have been considered and implemented, are set out in the Fifth Report of the Committee for Session 1991-92, which was published on 20 May.

I have no immediate plans to put any specific reports before the House because the next consideration of procedure is likely to be a further debate on the Report of the Select Committee on Sittings of the House, whose recommendations include a number of those made in earlier Procedure Committee reports.

Disabled Employees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council what percentage of the total work force in the Privy Council Office are registered as disabled; what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people within the Privy Council Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There are no registered disabled among the 31 staff currently employed in the Privy Council Office. Direct recruitment is rarely undertaken, but application forms and selection procedures conform with the relevant equal opportunities code of practice.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Holdings

16. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the total number of agricultural holdings in Britain (i) in 1979 and (ii) in 1992; and if he will give the Government's estimate of the number of agricultural holdings in the year 2000.

Mr. Curry: In 1979 the total was 295,000 and in 1991, the latest for which figures are available, there were 274,000. No forecast is available for the year 2000.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions have taken place regarding the implementation of a de-commissioning scheme for certain United Kingdom registered fishing vessels.

Mr. Curry: The Government's proposals for effort control and decommissioning were set out in the recent consultation document.

Common Agricultural Policy

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress towards reform of the common agricultural policy.

20. Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest position concerning common agricultural policy reform; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement about progress on reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Gentleman to the statement that I made to the House on 22 May.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the amount of the British contribution to the common agricultural policy for 1991; and what percentage this contribution makes of the whole common agricultural policy funding.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to give a figure. The United Kingdom contributes to the EC budget as a whole, not to individual parts of the budget such as the common agricultural policy. Moreover, the United Kingdom's contribution to the budget is reduced by the abatement —£2,366 million in 1991-92—to reduce our overall share and this cannot realistically be allocated to the different parts of the budget.

Hedgerows

19. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to preserve hedgerows and encourage planting of new ones.

Mr. Curry: This Department encourages farmers to preserve and maintain our hedgerow stock through the farm and conservation grant and environmentally sensitive area schemes, and through the advice given by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

EC Beef Regime

21. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent of fraudulent trading within the common agricultural policy beef regime; and what has been the estimated cost to public funds.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to estimate the extent of fraud in the common agricultural policy, since, by definition, undetected fraud cannot be measured. No separate figures are available for fraud within the beef regime; however, overall in 1990, 819 cases of irregularity (the definition of which goes wider than fraud) in EAGGF guarantee expenditure were reported by member states with a value of 138 mecu (£98 million). These cases represent about 0·5 per cent. of EAGGF guarantee expenditure in that year. However, fraud is clearly a serious problem and must be tackled vigorously.

Farming Regulations

22. Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the burden of regulations on the farming community.

Mr. Curry: This Department participates fully in the Government's deregulation initiative. I am determined to keep the burden of regulation EEC and national as light as possible.

Recreational Events

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with land owners and the Forestry Commission in respect of its property in England about charging for access for recreational events.

Mr. Curry: I have had no such discussions but the Forestry Commission negotiates with the interests concerned when reviewing its charges for specialist recreational activities, such as orienteering and motor rallying.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to improve animal welfare within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he is making in discussions with European Community counterparts about animal welfare.

Mr. Soames: The Government will continue to press for the high standards of animal welfare which apply in this country to be adopted throughout the European Community. We will give a high priority to animal welfare during the United Kingdom Presidency of the Community, and will seek to ensure that the Community acts on the principles of the declaration on protection of animals which was agreed at Maastricht following a United Kingdom initiative.

Seismic Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he is making with his investigations into the effect of seismic surveys on fishing stocks in the Solent and surrounding waters.

Mr. Curry: No work has yet been carried out in the United Kingdom on the effects of seismic surveys on fish stocks, but ELF Enterprise Caledonia which is undertaking the seismic survey west of the Isle of Wight, has agreed to fund research which will examine its effect on bass.

Fallen Stock

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to assist farmers to deal with fallen stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Government are taking a number of measures to help alleviate the problems of disposal of fallen stock. They include:

provision of free advice and literature on the various methods of disposing of fallen animals, including safe burial;

the exemption of animal carcase incineration under 50kg per hour from regulations under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, which makes the purchasing of small scale incinerators a more attractive investment; issuing shortly for public consultation a planning policy guidance note on pollution and waste management including incineration;

funding research and development in the field of animal waste disposal, including a £0·5 million programme to determine which rendering processes destroy certain pathogens;

helping the rendering industry to examine alternatives to landfilling meat and bonemeal derived from specified bovine offal; and identifying investment in the animal by-products sector as a priority area for EC grant aid.

The Department also intends to press the Community to move forward as rapidly as possible under the provisions of the EC Animal Waste Directive, to adopt animal health rules for knackers yards so as to ensure that they can continue their key role after 1995.

Poultry

28. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest position on relaxing the regulations of the Zoonoses Order concerning poultry.

Mr. Soames: I have already introduced a number of changes to the salmonella control measures in the light of developing circumstances and scientific knowledge. I will continue to keep the measures under close review.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number and percentage of (a) broilers and (b) laying hens in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland which had (i) signs of bone defects or were (ii) seriously lame on reaching the slaughterhouse, in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: These figures are not collected centrally. However, in 1989 a survey commissioned by the Department indicated that 29 per cent. of hens from battery cages had damaged bones by the time they reached the stunner. Handling techniques were addressed in the light of these results and we plan to commission a further survey so see what changes have resulted. We also have a continuing programme of research into leg problems in broilers.

Whaling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy during the United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers to seek a ban on whaling within EC waters and by EC nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Whaling, in any form, is already banned within United Kingdom fishery limits. No whaling for commercial or scientific purposes is believed to take place within other member states' fishery limits. The United Kingdom, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland, the Netherlands and Spain, as members of the International Whaling Commission, are bound by the IWC's moratorium. The Community prohibits trade in whale products through its implementation of the convention on trade in endangered species.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to support the French Government proposal for an Antarctic whale sanctuary; if he will encourage other International Whaling Commission member states to support the proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The proposal by the Government of France for a sanctuary in the southern hemisphere is due to be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of the International Whaling Commission in Glasgow at the end of June. Details of the French proposals have only just been received and will receive careful study. The proposals address a number of questions to the commission's scientific committee, whose advice we shall also need to evaluate.

Sandeels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received for the creation of exclusion prohibition areas against a directed sandeel fishery on (a) Dogger Bank, (b) off Shetland and (c) in the south-west mackerel box; and what proposals he has for introducing this.

Mr. Curry: I am considering representations from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations. Sandeel fishing is not permitted at present off Shetland. Small mesh fishing in the south west mackerel box is for species such as horse mackerel for human consumption as well as possible industrial end uses. The EC Commission has undertaken to present a report on industrial fishing before 1 September 1992. We will seek to progress any action on this report during our Presidency of the Commu[illegible].

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received for the establishment of a total allowable catch for sandeels; and what proposals he has to introduce this.

Mr. Curry: The most recent representation is from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations. Sandeels are naturally a very short-lived species and it is not possible to set realistic total allowable catches by the usual procedures. Currently limits are set by licence for the west coast of Scotland or a quota arrangement between the EC and Norway.

Industrial Fishing

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he intends making to advance restrictions on industrial fishing while holding the EC presidency.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission has undertaken to present a report on industrial fishing before 1 September 1992. We will seek to make progress on this issue during our Presidency.

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations have been made to him in respect of industrial fishing in the south-west mackerel box.

Mr. Curry: This year I have received six letters.

Pollution Control

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will increase the level of grant aid to farmers for installing pollution control measures.

Mr. Curry: Our 50 per cent. grant rate is already exceptionally high. The normal maximum rate which member states can pay for this type of grant under EC regulations is 35 per cent. and our higher rate was only agreed by the Commission because the grant was carefully targeted on specific types of investment.

GATT

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the discussions he has had with EC Agriculture Ministers concerning the Uruguay round of GATT talks and the levels of reduction in agricultural subsidies in the EC.

Mr. Curry: The GATT round negotiations are regularly discussed by the Agriculture Council. We have strongly supported the Commission in its attempts to find the basis for an early and balanced agreement which would meet the objectives of the round as regards reductions in agricultural support world wide. The recent agreement on CAP reform will strengthen the Commission's position in these exchanges.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representation he has received regarding the reform of the common fisheries policy to provide for a package of social measures to assist individuals and communities affected by a contraction of the fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Curry: Our officials have received representations from the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations about social measures.

Officials have also participated in discussions held by the European Commission, within the framework of the mid-term review of the CFP and the reform of the structural funds, about possible socio-economic proposals. The Commission's ideas are at a very formative stage and it is too early to say what they will formally propose or to what areas the proposals may apply. The Government will ensure that the needs of United Kingdom fishermen are taken properly into account as discussions continue.

Brown Hare Syndrome

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hares in Britain were found to be suffering from European brown hare syndrome in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Curry: Although the Department is aware of an apparent decrease in the incidence of European brown hare syndrome in Great Britain, the disease is not notifiable and so comprehensive data are not maintained.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 5 June 1992

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand Prisoners (Plymouth)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends taking following the escape of six remand prisoners from the remand centre at Crownhill police station, Plymouth, on 29 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Responsibility for the security of police facilities used to hold remand prisoners lies with the chief officer of police concerned. I understand that the Devon and Cornwall constabulary is enquiring into the circumstances of the escape and reviewing the relevant security arrangements.

Crime, North Yorkshire

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will describe what action he proposes to take to combat crime in north Yorkshire.

Mr. Charles Wardle [pursuant to his reply, 14 May 1992 c. 730]: In answering the hon. Member's supplementary question to the above question, I passed on information which I now know to have been inaccurate. The average annual rate of increase in recorded crime in the North Yorkshire police area between 1974 and 1979 was 1·5 per cent. and between 1979 and 1991 7·8 per cent. I apologise to the hon. Member for any inconvenience caused by the earlier inaccurate information.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit Disqualifications

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many unemployed people were disqualified for unemployment benefit and for what periods, under each paragraph of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, in the area covered by the Newport, Gwent unemployment benefit office in the week commencing 8 June; and if she will place this information in the Library;

(2) what information is available to her, and from what sources, as to the lengths of periods of disqualification for unemployment benefit imposed under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Health and Safety at Work

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans her Department has to submit films on (a) well-being at work, (b) safety at work, (c) control of air pollution at work or (d) the control of noise and vibrations at work, for the European video film festival on safety, hygiene and health protection at work sponsored by the European Commission, to be held in Thessaloniki in October.

Mr. McLoughlin: We expect that the United Kingdom film and video industry will be well represented at the European video film festival.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has written to more than 250 film and video producers in the United Kingdom who are known to have made health and safety videos which may be eligible for entry to the film festival.

HSE will also select suitable videos made by its own film unit and videos commissioned from outside producers for submission to the European Commission by the 19 June deadline.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table setting out the budget allocations to each TEC for each block of their expenditure for 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 19 May 1992, Official Report, column 134.

EC Ministers

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what engagements she is planning to have with her European counterparts in the next three weeks.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment will be meeting European Community employment ministers at the Social Affairs Council on 24 June. Before the Council, she plans to met a number of her counterparts.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what decisions he has made on the recommendations of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art in its recent report; and if he will make a statement on the proposal for the introduction of a very restricted list of heritage objects which could be prohibited from export.

Mr. Mellor: I share the view, expressed by almost all who made representations on the report, that the disadvantages of listing far outweigh the advantages. Listing would represent a diminution in the rights of owners to dispose of their property as they saw fit. And prohibition upon the export of outstanding heritage items would distort the market value, both for outstanding items and others. Therefore, I have firmly decided against the committee's recommendation, made most reluctantly, to list works of art.

The protection of the heritage is one of my prime concerns. There are, however, ways of achieving that aim other than listing, such as the scheme for acceptances in lieu of tax. The recent acquisitions of the paintings

"Portrait of a lady with a squirrel and a starling" by Holbein and "The Old Horse Guards, London from St. James's Park" by Canaletto demonstrate the role that both the private and public sectors can play. I have assumed responsibility for the controls on licensing the export of works of art, formerly undertaken by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, with effect from 1 June 1992. I am considering the committee's other largely procedural recommendations.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give an estimate for the total expenditure by his Department on press and public relations in 1992-93.

Mr. Mellor: Estimated expenditure by the Department of National Heritage on press and public relations for 1992-93 is likely to be in the region of £250,000 for running costs, and £500,000 on staffing costs.

Buildings at Risk Trust

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if the Buildings at Risk Trust has, directly or indirectly, received public funds from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The Buildings at Risk Trust has been offered a grant of £12,975 for 1992-93 towards the costs of running its Buildings at Risk Advisory Service. This grant was offered under the Department of the Environment's special grants programme, the heritage element of which is now the responsibility of my Department. No grant has yet been claimed.

EDUCATION

School Sports Grounds

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the number of schools sports grounds that have been sold by local education authorities each year since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The information which the hon. Member requests is unavailable, since local education authorities are not required to inform the Department of disposals of surplus land and buildings. However, the DES included a specific sum of £0·5 million in the Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1991-92 for the preparation of a register of recreational land to monitor gains and losses in playing fields. The register is due for completion by June 1993.

School Closures

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what process of appeal there is against the Minister's decision to close a school, when new or corrected information becomes available.

Mr. Forth: There is no statutory process of appeal. It is open to a party with an interest in the matter to challenge a decision in the courts.

Physical Education

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the average number of hours per week devoted to physical education in secondary schools for each year since 1981.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Grant-maintained Status

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what educational criteria he is using to determine applications from schools for grant-maintained status;

(2) what financial criteria he is using to determine applications for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend determines each application for grant-maintained status on its merits, taking account of individual schools' circumstances. His main concern is that all grant maintained schools should be viable in both educational and financial terms.

Religious Schools

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications from religious schools for voluntary-aided status over the last three years have been (a) granted and (b) refused; and if he will list the religious denomination of each such application, and of each application which is currently being considered.

Mr. Forth: The following table gives the information requested. (This excludes schools formed by the amalgamation of existing voluntary schools but includes applications for new voluntary aided schools where no independent school already existed.) There are no applications made within the last three years that are currently under consideration but following a judicial review my right hon. Friend is currently reconsidering an application made prior to June 1989 for the establishment of a Muslim voluntary-aided school.

	Number of applications since June 1989	Number granted	Number refused
Church of England	3	0	3
Church of England/ Methodist	2	1	1
Roman Catholic	4	1	3
Jewish	4	2	2
Total	13	4	9

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the criteria he applies when considering applications from religious schools for voluntary-aided status; and what changes or modifications have been made in those criteria over the past three years.

Mr. Forth: In reaching a decision, my right hon. Friend takes account of a number of factors, including:

(i) the need for additional places within the maintained sector;
(ii) denominational need for a particular type of education;
(iii) whether the LEA supports the proposals;
(iv) suitability of premises;

(v) the school's ability to deliver the National Curriculum.

No changes or modifications have been made to these criteria in the past three years.

School Governors

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to quantify the increase of time devoted by voluntary governors of primary and secondary schools respectively consequent on (a) increased responsibilities arising from local management of schools and (b) further requirements of time on governors of grant maintained secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: A survey carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research in 1990 found that the average amount of time spent by governors on their duties was 10 hours a term rising to 20 hours for heads and 30 for chairmen. There was no substantial difference between primary and secondary school governors, and it is not evident that more governor time is necessarily needed in a grant-maintained school.

I pay tribute to the many parents, teachers, and others who voluntarily give of their time to run their local schools.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps are being taken by his Department to tackle the imbalance between women and men in promotional posts and at levels of senior management in both the teaching and lecturing professions.

Mr. Forth: Employers should be fully aware of the existing statutory requirements governing gender issues in employment. It is not for the Department to seek to influence the choices they may make in appointments to senior management posts.

TRANSPORT

Speed Control

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in developing measures to control vehicle speeds through villages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Since the announcement last July that the Department was to take action jointly with the County Surveyors' Society, a working group has been established on which the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office are also represented. The group has met several times, and has produced an interim report. A number of schemes have been identified in villages on trunk and county roads across England, Wales, and Scotland on which a variety of traffic calming and related measures are to be introduced to constrain vehicle speeds. These schemes will be monitored through the summer and autumn. The results will be evaluated, and will feed into a final report from the working group which I am expecting early next year. This work will provide the basis for detailed guidance to highway authorities on the measures which prove most effective.

A leaflet has been produced describing the main features of the working group's deliberations and its interim report. This has been deposited in the Library, and copies are available on request from the Department's traffic policy division.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the research undertaken into the risk of fire in the channel tunnel will be placed before the House.

Mr. Freeman: Many of the tests and studies relating to the risk of fire in the tunnel shuttle trains are being undertaken by Eurotunnel; publication of the results of any of that work is a matter for the company but the safety authority proposes to publish a general commentary on the work. It will not be possible to publish the commentary until the tests and studies have been completed; this will occur next year at a later stage of commissioning.

In addition, Eurotunnel has commissioned a study of the overall safety of the tunnel system. The safety authority has employed consultants to review Eurotunnel's work and proposes, next year, to issue a report on the outcome.

Ports and Airports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out his proposals for the privatisation of the principal trust ports and municipal airports in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Under the Ports Act 1991 four trust ports, Clyde, Forth, Medway and Tees and Hartlepool, have already successfully sought privatisation and a fifth, the Port of London Authority, has sold its commercial docks at Tilbury into the private sector. My right hon. Friend believes that the proper place for the major trust ports is in the private sector and he hopes that more of them will bring themselves forward for privatisation. He recognises however that the circumstances of the individual trust ports vary greatly. Before compelling a port to privatise itself under the powers in the Ports Act which will become available to him in July of next year he will consider its circumstances very carefully.

As regards municipal airports I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 18 May 1992, Official Report, 31.

Seismic Surveys

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what studies he has undertaken of the safety issues raised by the towed sonar/seismic survey being undertaken off the Needles in view of the congestion in these waters at this time of year from yachts and pleasure craft;

(2) if he will undertake a special survey into the safety aspects of the towed seismic survey being undertaken off the Needles in respect of the congestion of these waters at the present time of year.

Mr. Norris: Ships engaged in seismic surveys are required to show the signals prescribed in the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea which indicate they are restricted in their ability to manoeuvre. Special surveys are undertaken if a need is clearly identified, but no approach has been made in respect of seismic surveys off the Needles.

NAVTEX

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the progress being made by the French authorities for the broadcast of NAVTEX information in English.

Mr. Norris: The international language for NAVTEX broadcasts is English. I understand that the French authorities have recently begun to issue NAVTEX broadcasts from Brest in English, but warnings broadcast by the French elsewhere in the English channel are not available through NAVTEX. However, the Hydrographic Office monitor these French broadcasts and arrange for them to be re-issued in English by NAVTEX where appropriate.

Cash Limits

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give a breakdown of his Department's expenditure by the smallest geographic unit possible.

Mr. Norris: The latest estimates of general Government expenditure on transport by territory and region are given in appendix E of "Public Expenditure Analyses to 1994-95: Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement", Cm. 1920.

NATIONAL FINANCE

BCCI

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many payments have been made by the Deposit Protection Board to depositors of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International in terms of (a) numbers and (b) value.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that up to close of business on 28 May 1992 payments have been made by the Deposit Protection Board to some 450 depositors of BCCI, involving total protection payments of some £1·6 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the Deposit Protection Board and payments to former depositors of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: The amount which the Deposit Protection Scheme will pay out to former depositors of BCCI will depend on how many depositors make valid claims under the scheme. The Deposit Protection Board is anxious to make payments as soon as practicable, in line with its statutory duty.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the first payment was made under the Deposit Protection Board to former depositors of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that the Deposit Protection Board made the first payments to former depositors of BCCI on 16 April 1992.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications have been made to the Deposit Protection Board for compensation by former depositors of BCCI.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that, as at close of business on 28 May 1992, some 15,000 applications for compensation have been made to the Deposit Protection Board by former depositors of BCCI.

Customs Aircraft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evaluation Her Majesty's customs and waterguard service has made of the use of airborne radar surveillance to counter drug smuggling and illegal immigration; and if he will list the aircraft available to Her Majesty's customs for these duties.

Sir John Cope: Her Majesty's Customs in association with other Government Departments carry out target-based and routine aerial surveillance over land, territorial and international waters. A procurement exercise is being evaluated to establish a managed aerial surveillance service uniquely for the Department using the best of modern technology including radar.

For security reasons, it is not the practice to identify specific aircraft used.

Shareholdings

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list his quoted shareholdings together with their value and the percentage of the issued share capital owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Nelson: The table shows the ordinary shares held by the Government, their market valuation and the percentage of the issued share capital that they represent.

Public Borrowing

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contingency plans he has made to deposit funds in Europe if public borrowing exceeds the limit set by the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson: There is no need for such contingency plans. The Maastricht treaty does not set a limit on public borrowing. A member state would have to be judged to be running an "excessive" budget deficit for sanctions to be imposed, and such sanctions will not apply until stage 3 of economic and monetary union, and then only as a last resort. Although the United Kingdom has no obligation to move to stage 3, the Government's policies are designed to avoid running deficits that might be judged excessive.

CIS (Debts)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the proposal advanced in April by the treasurer of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, that the United Kingdom write-off debts inherited by countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States from the former Soviet Union in exchange for the provision to the United Kingdom of recoverable nuclear materials.

Mr. Nelson: The safety of nuclear materials in the republics of the former Soviet Union is a key concern, as is the whole process of economic adjustment in those republics, including the servicing of debts. The United Kingdom is working closely with other Governments and international institutions on these issues. Linking the two issues, which raise widely differing concerns, would not be helpful.

Value Added Tax

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received from the European Commission about the levying of value added tax on food, electricity and children's clothing; what proposals the Commission has made concerning the jurisdiction of the European Court in this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: None. All the United Kingdom's current zero rates are guaranteed by the Sixth VAT Directive which can be amended only by unanimous agreement of all member states.

EC Budget

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated (a) contribution to the European Community by the United Kingdom and (b) receipts from the European Community to the United Kingdom in each of the five last years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 May 1992]: Information concerning United Kingdom contributions to and receipts from the Community Budget for the years 1987-91 is set out in the following table. The figure for receipts covers public sector receipts only: the Commission does not provide member states with details of payments made directly to the private sector.

£ million

Year	Gross contribution after abatement	Public sector receipts
1987	4,049	2,328
1988	3,544	2,182
1989	4,431	2,116
1990	4,658	2,183
1991	3,309	2,765

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what printing contracts the company Hunterprint had or has outstanding with HMSO; and if he will give the dates and details of the nature and subject matter of the printed material for each contract.

Mr. Nelson: The hon. Gentleman's question falls within the scope of the policy announced in Cm 1263: arrangements have therefore been made for the Controller and Chief Executive of HMSO to respond direct. Copies of the letter will be placed in the House Library and with the Public Information Office.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make further funds available towards the costs of non-governmental organisation projects in Vietnam.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In May 1990, we committed £1 million to help finance non-government organisations' development projects in the two provinces to which the majority of the boat people return. This money has now been fully allocated to 18 projects which are having a positive local impact. I have now decided to commit a further £1 million towards the cost of further NGO projects in areas to which the majority of migrants will be returning. This new tranche will be focused on job creation projects and projects which have a direct effect on the economic well-being of the communities. This £1 million will be additional to expenditure in Vietnam under the joint funding scheme.

UNCED

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments to increase overseas development aid will be made by the United Kingdom to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government are willing to provide new and additional resources to the replenishment of the global environment facility, if other donors also do so. The GEF will help finance actions by developing countries, related particularly to climate change and biodiversity, which have benefits globally but which would not be justified in terms of their national benefits alone.

Special Programme for Africa

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help he proposes to give to the second phase of the special programme for Africa which was set up by the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 13 May at column. 141.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to further consider awarding compensation to veterans of British nuclear tests and, or their families; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government will consider sympathetically a claim for compensation on behalf of any ex-service man who can be shown to have suffered ill health from exposure to ionising radiation as a result of duties in connection with the nuclear test programme. An expert study conducted in 1988 by the National Radiological Protection Board conceded that the overall incidence of death and malignant disease among British nuclear test veterans has been no worse than for people who were not involved in the tests. A further report from the NRPB on more recent data on mortality and cancer evidence is expected later this year.

Libya

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the proposals from the United Nations for a meeting between representatives of the United Kingdom and Libyan Governments to discuss security issues relating to the supply of arms to the Provisional IRA; what will be the areas of discussion at the meeting on 9 June; and if he will explain the manner in which these arrangements were made public.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations Secretary-General told us on 14 May that the Libyan Foreign Minister had written to him offering to meet our long-standing request for information on Libya's connections with the Provisional IRA. We have agreed to a meeting under UN auspices in Geneva on 9 June at which this information can be handed over. There will be no discussion at the meeting. In response to press inquiries, the Secretary-General's spokesman in New York confirmed on 1 June that this meeting would take place.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to ensure that the outcome of meetings of the Council of Ministers of the European Communities held between 13 March and 6 May are reported in the usual way, in cases where such action has not yet been taken.

The Prime Minister: I have asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

Lockerbie Bombing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what communications Her Majesty's Government have received from the Government of Libya relating to two persons allegedly connected with the Lockerbie bombing of Pan Am 103.

The Prime Minister: We have had various approaches from Libyans and intermediaries over the Lockerbie bombing. None of these amounts to Libyan compliance with UN Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to establish a sustainable development commission in the United Kingdom in conjunction with the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: I have no such plans.

President Bush

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he next expects to meet President Bush; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

The Prime Minister: I shall meet President Bush at Camp David this weekend. I expect to discuss a wide range of subjects with him.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals on transfers of military spending to environmental investment will be put forward by the United Kingdom at the United Nations conference on environment and development.

The Prime Minister: There are no plans to put forward any such proposal.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what attempts have been made to minimise the use of official cars by the United Kingdom delegation to the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio de Janeiro this month.

The Prime Minister: We have made it a priority to limit the use of official cars at the Earth summit in Rio.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out details of the critical representations made to Her Majesty's Government since 31 May on the United Kingdom's policies and proposals for the United Nations conference on environment and development in Rio de Janeiro; and what response he has made to the respective criticisms.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 2 June 1992 at column 392.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Spending Power

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, including the various component figures, showing net weekly spending power for a married couple with one child aged 16 years where (a) both parents are unemployed and the child is at school, (b) one parent takes up employment in May 1992 for four hours a day, five days a week at rates of pay of (i) £2 per hour, (ii) £2·50 per hour and (iii) £3 per hour, and the child is at school and (c) the parent remains in employment as at (b) but the child leaves school and is unable to gain a youth training place, after family credit entitlement of 26 weeks has elapsed.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the tables. All assumptions used are as those in the published tax/benefit model tables. Each family is assumed to live in council property appropriate to its size and to pay estimated average rent and community charge.

It should be noted that the results in the tables cannot reflect, except by chance, the actual circumstances of particular people and cannot claim to be representative of the population at large. The tables use illustrative rents and do not, therefore, reflect the full range of housing costs which people may face.

Benefit Claims

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest annual figures for the London borough of Lambeth for the number of claims for (a) housing benefit, (b) income support and (c) family credit; and what those figures were one year ago and two years ago.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support and family credit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Young People (Benefits)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reassess the benefit needs of persons aged 16 and 17 years living with parents on benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Those 16 and 17-year-olds living with parents on benefit, and not in full-time education, employment or training, may in certain circumstances be eligible for income support under the severe hardship provision. When assessing any claim so made, full account is taken of parents' circumstances.

Water Rates

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in England and Wales are paying their water rates via deduction from social security.

Mr. Burt: At the end of February 1992 there were 116,890 income support recipients with deductions for water charges. This figure is based on statistics collected by the Benefits Agency's management information system at the end of February 1992. The figure is provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mortgage Debt

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken in the past 12 months to find out to what extent income support claimants were in arrears with their mortgage payments, and what information has become available to his Department, centrally or locally, as a result.

Mr. Burt: All income support claimants with mortgages have been sent a form, which they were required to have completed and returned by their lenders, giving information about their mortgage account. If the account is in arrears, the total arrears and details of payments made in the last three months are entered on the form. The completed forms are kept with the claimant's case papers for use in calculating and paying the mortgage interest element of income support. The information on the forms is not collated centrally or locally.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of income support claimants in the South Gwent and Islwyn district with mortgage liabilities were in arrears with their mortgage payments, in total and by ranges of amounts of arrears and numbers of monthly instalments unpaid, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Burt: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Taxation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people face a marginal tax/benefit withdrawal rate of 70 per cent. or more; and how many of them are in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Burt: In 1992-93, it is projected that 490,000 heads of benefit units receiving income-related benefits, where at least one partner works 16 hours a week or more, face marginal deduction rates of 70 per cent. or over. It is estimated that 375,000 of them would receive family credit.

Projections are based on three years pooled family expenditure survey data uprated to 1992-93 prices, taxes and benefit levels. They do not take into account disability working allowance, or transitional protection associated with the change in the family credit/income support hours rule.

Cash Limits

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there has been any change in the cash limited expenditure of his Department for 1992-93.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIV vote 3 (housing benefit administration and community charge benefit administration, payments into the social fund in respect of discretionary expenditure and other grants) will be increased by £13,981,000 from £351,991,000 to £365,972,000. This revision takes account of an increase in the grant-in-aid to the Independent Living Fund (£13,981,000) to enable it to continue to help severely disabled persons to live independently. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

WALES

Queensferry Roundabout

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will erect warning signs near Queensferry roundabout warning lorry drivers of the low railway bridge at Shotton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a county road matter and one for Clwyd county council to consider as the local highway authority.

Industrial Output

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of overall industrial output in Wales is accounted for by the defence industry.

Mr. David Hunt: The information required is not available centrally.

Teachers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of (a) male and (b) female primary and secondary school teachers; and how many (i) male and (ii) female headteachers there are in each sector in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is contained in the publication entitled "Statistics of Education in Wales: Schools—No. 5 1991", section 5, tables 5.06–5.08, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that all lists of candidates for public appointments in Wales contain equal numbers of men and women.

Mr. David Hunt: All public appointments are made on the basis of aptitude and merit. In addition to those overriding criteria, other factors are taken into account.

I have agreed an action plan designed to increase the proportion of public appointments held by women. As part of this, officials are required to include at least two women in the shortlist of candidates.

Managers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of managers in Wales; and how many of them are women.

Mr. David Hunt: It is estimated from the 1991 labour force survey that there were 162,000 managers and administrators in Wales; of these 43,000 were women.

Bilingual Health Promotion Material

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the provision of bilingual health promotion material by his Department to district health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Most of the health promotion materials used in Wales are produced by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales. Wherever possible, the authority published this material in Welsh or bilingual form.

When the Department arranges the publication of its own posters it always ensures that they are either in bilingual format or are available in English and Welsh.

This Department does distribute English-only posters which are produced by the Department of Health. We are currently examining means by which these can be translated, printed and made available in the Welsh language.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of (a) men and (b) women amongst the ranks of (i) senior lecturers and (ii) professors in further and higher education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information about the number of full-time staff in higher education, voluntary colleges and in higher and further education institutions maintained by local education authorities in 1990-91 is given in the following table together with information for the University of Wales which has been shown separately. Lecturers are categorised differently in the two groups, all categories of teaching staff are thus shown in the table.

Pupil Statistics

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the total numbers of (a) male and (b) female pupils studying (i) computer science, (ii) physics, (iii) maths, (iv) biology, (v) music and (vi) drama up to (1) GCSE level or (2) A-Level in Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information on the number of pupils studying particular subjects is available from the 1989 secondary school staffing survey and is shown in the following table.

Information for males and females separately is not available.

Number of pupils studying subjects to GCSE and A-level in Wales 1989[1]

	GCSE	A-level
Computer studies	16,100	1,700
Physics	24,800	5,400
Maths	70,400	11,100
Biology	33,600	8,000
Music	5,900	1,200
Drama	3,800	500

Official Visits

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish, for each day between 16 March and 9 April, all the official visits he undertook, indicating for each day the places he visited, the times he visited, the mode of transport he used and the total cost of all these visits.

Mr. David Hunt: During the recent general election campaign, the three Welsh Office Ministers retained all of their Welsh Office responsibilities. In a political capacity, I visited every constituency in Wales between 19 March and 9 April 1992. I also undertook three official engagements, listed in the table, travelling by car at no expense to the Welsh Office.

OFFICIAL ENGAGEMENTS

Wednesday 25 March, 11.00 am to 12.00 noon
Official opening of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry Unit, Glangwili Hospital; and visit to Cam Cyntaf sheltered employment unit, Cillefwr Industrial Estate, Carmarthen.

Friday 3 April, 10.40 am to 11.15 am
Official opening of new pilot line, Pilkington Micronics, Deeside.

Tuesday 7 April, 11.00 am to 12.00 noon
Official opening of Paediatric Unit, University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff.

County Council Elections

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it is his intention that the county council elections, due to be held in Wales in 1993, shall proceed as planned.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been approached by both local authority associations in Wales to consider the cancellation of the county council elections due in 1993. No decision on this has yet been taken.

ENVIRONMENT

Dog Whelks

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the findings of the Marine Conservation Society's survey of the dog whelk population.

Mr. Maclean: This survey is funded by the Department of the Environment and four annual reports have been received to date. The latest indicates that the effects of tributyl tin are still widespread around the United Kingdom coast, but suggests that there are indications that some populations are beginning to recover.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his findings on the connection between tributyl tin and the decline of the dog whelk.

Mr. Maclean: Government-funded research on the effects of TBT on dog whelks has been carried out by the Plymouth marine laboratory, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department and the Marine Conservation Society. Contractors are encouraged to publish their results in the open scientific literature; so far more than 30 such reports have been produced.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas where the dog whelk colonies are (a) on the increase and (b) in decline.

Mr. Maclean: The dog whelk is the species showing the greatest sensitivity to TBT in United Kingdom waters. Despite gradual improvements in water quality since TBT-based paints were banned for use on small boats and fish farming equipment in 1987, dog whelks have not yet shown significant increases in population density. However, there is some evidence of limited improvement of breeding capacity at sites in Scotland (monitored by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department), on the south coast, including the Isle of Wight (monitored by Plymouth marine laboratory) and more generally around the United Kingdom coast (at sites surveyed by the Marine Conservation Society).

Benzene Discharges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate his Department has made of the likely effect on the level of benzene discharges as a result of increased use of recyclable plastic in vehicle production.

Mr. Maclean: No estimation has been made. The most significant sources of benzene are car exhausts and fuel evaporation.

Krypton

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to ensure that the current discharge of krypton to the atmosphere by the British Nuclear Fuels Limited reprocessing plant at Sellafield is stopped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Aerial discharges, including krypton, are subject to strict limits and conditions in the certificate of authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The limits are set to ensure no member of the public receives a radiation dose as a result of these discharges in excess of the recommended safety levels.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, in conjunction with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food are currently considering an application made by BNFL for the revision of this authorisation, I would not wish to pre-empt their deliberations nor the statutory public consultative process at this time.

Water Supplies

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment under what circumstances it is permissible for mains water supplies to be used for agricultural or horticultural purposes (a) under glass, (b) for market gardening and (c) for conventional agriculture, respectively; and under what statutory rule or guidance water authorities may issue licences for use of ground and surface water, respectively, for purposes (b) and (c).

Mr. Maclean: The supply of mains water to customers is entirely a matter for water undertakers. Under section 55 of the Water Industry Act 1991 they must supply water to any non-domestic premises unless doing so would be unreasonbly expensive or would affect their duty to supply water to domestic premises. A mains supply to non-domestic premises may be used for any purpose unless specifically prohibited by the provisions of a drought order.

Licences for the abstraction of ground or surface water are issued by the National Rivers Authority, using the Water Resources (Licences) Regulations 1965 in conjunction with section 38 of the Water Resources Act 1991.

Burial Regulations

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of all those regulations that an individual has to comply with in order to arrange to be buried on land owned by that individual.

Mr. Robin Squire: No such regulations are necessary, but any individual considering such action should consult his local authority about a possible risk to public health. He should also comply with the Registration of Burials Act 1864.

Zoo Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take, during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community, to ensure that the best possible safeguards for the welfare of animals kept in zoos are included in the EC proposal for a directive laying down the minimum standards for such animals.

Mr. Maclean: The Government will continue to play an active and constructive role in the negotiations on the draft Zoos Directive with the intention of maintaining the high standards of care and accommodation already being set by zoos in this country under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981, and encouraging similar standards throughout the Community.

Mortgage Debt

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to meet the Council of Mortgage Lenders regarding assistance for householders whose outstanding mortgage debt exceeds the value of their houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friends the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Secretary of State for Social Security and the Secretary of State for Wales met mortgage lenders on 2 June to review progress on the package of measures agreed between the Government and the Council of Mortgage Lenders in December to reduce the number of repossessions. It was agreed that lenders should continue to look at the whole range of options available for addressing this problem, including formal mortgage to rent schemes, shared equity arrangements and more generous repayment terms. These measures will help those householders who are in arrears with their mortgage repayments.

For their part, the Government have enacted legislation for the direct payment to lenders of the mortgage interest element of income support, and has suspended until 19 August this year the requirement for stamp duty on transactions up to £250,000.

The Council of Mortgage Lenders estimates that the measures taken since December will save some 55,000 repossessions this year: 40,000 as a result of new procedures for dealing with arrears cases; and 15,000 as a result of the direct payment to lenders of the mortgage interest element of income support.

The combined effect of the measures taken by the Government and lenders will be to reduce the number of repossessions in 1992 and restore confidence to the housing market. Householders whose outstanding mortgage debt exceeds the value of their house will benefit from these measures, and from a revival of the housing market.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistics he has on the number of households in each region where the mortgage debt outstanding exceeds the value of the house.

Mr. Baldry: The only information readily available relates to house purchases by first-time buyers. This has been published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders in the June issue of its newsletter, "Mortgage Monthly", which is held in the House of Commons Library.

Earth Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the proposals put forward by the United Kingdom on (a) reducing fossil fuel use, (b) nuclear power, (c) minimising and management of hazardous wastes and (d) protecting biodiversity at the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have played a full part in the negotiations on the climate change and biodiversity conventions, and supports the agenda 21 chapters on environmentally sound management of radioactive and hazardous wastes.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate the Government have made of the rate of extinction of endangered species if the biodiversity treaty is not signed.

Mr. Maclean: We do not yet have the technology or knowledge to estimate precisely the rate of species extinction, but some estimates suggest that there may be as many as 50 million species on earth of which, if present trends continue, up to one third could become extinct by 2025.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those countries which have agreed to sign the treaty on biodiversity at the Earth summit and those which have not.

Mr. Maclean: The convention on biological diversity will be open for signature from 5 June. We cannot speculate as to which countries will sign the convention, although we hope that the United Kingdom will be able to sign.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the composition of the British delegation to the Earth summit in Rio de Janeiro with particular reference to the numbers representing local government.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom delegation will consist of the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for the Environment, the Minister for Overseas Development, myself, and 30 officials from the Department of the Environment, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Overseas Development Agency, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Forestry Commission and from our diplomatic posts in Brazil. There are two local government representatives among the 12 observers who will form part of the United Kingdom delegation. The other observers represent environment and development groups, science, business, youth and trade unions.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the urban programme allocations to each urban programme authority for 1992-93.

Mr. Squire: Initial allocations to the urban programme authorities for 1992-93 were announced by my predecessor on 16 January 1992. Details are set out in the table.

Greenhouses Gases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's strategy to reduce concentrations of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom supports the ultimate objective of the framework convention on climate change which is to achieve stabilisation of greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a level that would prevent dangerous anthropogenic interference with the climate system. The commitments in the convention on limiting greenhouse gas emissions would be an important first step towards this objective.

Acid Deposition

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the results of the national materials exposure programme; how many times the acid deposition building effects review group has met since the publication of its 1989 report; when the group will produce its next report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The acid deposition building effects review group last met in September 1991. There are no plans at this stage to produce a second report.

Results of the national materials exposure programme will be published in the July 1992 edition of the scientific journal Atmospheric Environment. A major review of the first four years of the NMEP programme is to be produced by the end of 1992.

Agenda 21

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evaluation he has made of the United Nations estimated figure of £125 billion per year needed to implement the agenda 21 proposals following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: The costs of implementing agenda 21 are indicative estimates prepared by the UNCED secretariat. These have not been considered by Governments. Additional financial help from developed countries will be needed, but the costs will depend on individual countries' circumstances and how they decide to implement the activities presented in agenda 21. The Government have argued that the resources from agenda 21 must come from resetting national spending priorities and from mainstream aid.

Vauxhall Cross and Millbank

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will occupy the buildings at Vauxhall Cross and Thames house, Millbank, which are respectively under construction or being refurbished.

Mr. Howard: The Vauxhall Cross building is intended for occupation by the secret intelligence service. The building at Thames house, Millbank is intended principally for occupation by the security service.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what circumstances questions by hon. Members seeking statistical information relating to services or benefits for which a next steps agency is responsible are (a) answered by Ministers and (b) referred to the agency's chief executive; and what assessment he has made of the consistency in the practice followed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's policy on answering questions on agency matters was most recently set out in the Government's reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's 1991 report on the next steps initiative (Cm 1761), which said:

"In normal circumstances the source of the reply should follow the allocation of responsibilities as between the Secretary of State and the Chief Executive in the Agency's framework document; but in all cases the decision on who will respond rests with the Minister. The Government believes this is right and in accordance with important wider considerations about Ministerial accountability to Parliament. In time, as the system beds down, the Government expects that the cases which have given rise to concern will become fewer with any variations in practice kept to a minimum. The Governmennt will continue to keep the situation under review."

My Office has from time to time reminded Ministers of this policy. I have placed a copy of the current guidance in the Library.

HEALTH

Respiratory Illnesses

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence is available to the Department on the rate of hospital admissions of patients suffering from respiratory illnesses in the Greenwich health authority area by comparison with other health authority areas in London and in the south-east of England in the past two years.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Portering Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what initiatives she has to extend compulsory competitive tendering for hospital portering services; and what studies she has carried out of the costs and benefits involved.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's proposals to extend competitive tendering and other forms of market testing in the National Health Service were set out in the White Paper "Competing for Quality" published last November, a copy of which is available in the Library. The indications from the many health authorites who have market tested their portering services as a local initiative are that it leads to better specification of service, lower costs, and more flexible deployment of staff.

National Health Service Management

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make public comments on the findings of the Tomlinson report on the future of the national health service management structure in London.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard and his team are keeping my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and Education and myself fully informed as the inquiry progresses. We shall decide how and when a public announcement of their advice should be made when that advice has been formally presented.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the key business targets for the Medicines Control Agency for 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the 1992-93 key business targets for the Medicines Control Agency.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations she has received about Birmingham city council's use of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Yeo: Four letters have been received about the Children Act and its provisions for regulating day care services for young children.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the number of social workers approved under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally. Approval of social workers under the Mental Health Act 1983 is the responsibility of local authority social services departments.

Broadmoor Patients (Legal Protection)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many representations were made to her Department between 1985 and 1989 about the alleged failure of a certain consultant psychiatrist, whose name has been supplied to her, to comply with the requirements of part IV of the Mental Health Act 1983 in treating patients at Dorset house, Broadmoor special hospital; what was the nature of the alleged failures in compliance; what assessment was made of the validity of these representations; and what action was taken to ensure that all patients treated at Dorset house received the legal protection to which they were entitled under the Act;

(2) what assessment was made by the Mental Health Act Commission of the alleged failure of a certain consultant psychiatrist, whose name has been supplied to her, to comply with part IV of the Mental Health Act 1983 in treating patients at Dorset house, Broadmoor special hospital between 1985 and 1989;

(3) what were the circumstances and terms of the agreement under which a certain consultant psychiatrist, whose name has been supplied to her, ceased to be employed at Broadmoor hospital; what is his current employment; and what responsibilities this includes for persons detained under the Mental Health Act 1983 and treated under part IV of that Act.

Mr. Yeo: The consultant concerned took early retirement from Broadmoor hospital in December 1989. I cannot comment on representations or allegations about an individual employee or on the terms of any settlement which may have been agreed with that employee. His responsibilities in any subsequent national health service employment would be a matter for the employing body. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required by section 120(1) of the Mental Health Act 1983 to keep under review the exercise of the powers and the discharge of the duties conferred or imposed by the Act relating to the detention of patients or to patients liable to be detained under the Act. This function is performed on my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's behalf by the Mental Health Act Commission as required by section 121(2) of the Act. Throughout the period from 1985 to 1989 Dorset house was visited regularly by members of the Commission. Their findings were reported to the Department which considered them and took action as necessary (from 1 October 1989 this became the direct responsibility of the newly-established Special Hospitals Service Authority).

Residential Care

Mrs. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish a forum of residential care organisations to develop policy on residential care.

Mr. Yeo: We shall be giving careful consideration to all the recommendations contained in Lady Howe's report on residential care which are relevant to the Department.

Mapperley Hospital

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the closure of Mapperley hospital.

Mr. Sackville: The closure of Mapperley hospital is a matter for the district health authority. The hon. Member can obtain a detailed report by writing to the district chairman.

EC Presidency

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Department's priorities are for the United Kingdom presidency of the EC.

Dr. Mawhinney: We will seek to increase inter-governmental co-operation on public health issues and take forward specific measures within the Health Council to promote health and to prevent disease.

Dental Treatment

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental surgeries offered treatment within the national health service in 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is collected on the number of dentists, rather than the number of dental surgeries. The number of dentists practising in the general dental services for each of the years requested is shown in the table.

Year	Number of dentists
30 September 1979	12,146
30 September 1983	13,672
30 September 1987	14,765
30 March 1992	15,532

There are 27 per cent. more dentists in the general dental services than in 1979 providing more than 7 million more courses of adult dental treatment, an increase of 43 per cent.

"A Scandal Waiting to Happen"

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made to the Royal College of Nursing in respect of the document, "A Scandal Waiting to Happen".

Mr. Yeo: We are considering the report.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Council of Health Ministers decided to take on the Commission's report on AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Commission's report on the "Europe against AIDS" programme has not yet been finalised. The report is expected to be ready for submission to the Council of Health Ministers in late 1992-early 1993.

Cancer Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department has provided to the United Kingdom Co-ordinating Committee on Cancer Research for its study into the causes of cancer, involving childhood leukaemia and other childhood cancers, pertaining to benzene-related situations.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 22 May 1992]: The Department has not provided nor been requested to provide any information on benzene-related situations to the United Kingdom Co-ordinating Committee on Cancer Research for its study into causes of cancer, involving childhood leukaemia and other childhood cancers.

DEFENCE

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent meetings his Department has held with military officials from countries of the former Warsaw pact; what information was exchanged; and what was the cost to his Department of the meetings.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is continuing its policy of steadily building up military contacts with the countries of the former Warsaw pact, both bilaterally and under the auspices of the North Atlantic Co-operation Council (NACC). The seminar on the democratic management of defence, held at the Royal United Services Institute (RUSI) on 18 and 19 May, provided our most recent opportunity for contacts with military officials from the former Soviet republics and the countries of central and eastern Europe. In the margins of the seminar, Colonel General Omelichev, vice chief of the CIS Armed Forces, paid a call on the Chief of the General Staff; and, I received Lt. General Zhivitsa, Chief of Staff of the Ukrainian Armed Forces. Both calls provided a valuable opportunity for an exchange of views on the current situation in the CIS and eastern Europe. The final costs of these meetings are not yet available, but are expected to be minimal.

Military Exhibitions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is afforded by United Kingdom military attachés to British Army and military equipment manufacturers attending military equipment and arms exhibitions in states where they are posted.

Mr. Aitken: United Kingdom service attachés can provide visiting British military equipment manufacturers with advice and introductions as appropriate. This assistance is not limited to attendance at arms and equipment exhibitions.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate made by Her Majesty's Government of Iraq's nearness to being able to build nuclear weapons before the Gulf war, based on information made available by the United Nations special inspection commission in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The International Atomic Energy Authority's sixth nuclear inspection team found incontrovertible evidence that Iraq had developed a crude nuclear warhead design. But for the military action against Iraq initiated by the United Nations, Iraq could have had its first nuclear weapon by 1993.

Army Apprentices

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on rationalising the training of Army apprentices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Command Paper 1595 referred to proposals to restructure the Army's training organisation and I announced (in the House on 10 March this year) that from September 1992 we shall introduce a one year standard foundation course at each of the existing Army apprentice colleges in place of the current two-year course.

We now propose that all apprentices should undertake a common one-year foundation course at a single Army technical college, with one wing at Arborfield for the technical corps and another at Aldershot for the Army Catering Corps and Adjutant General's Corps.

I have already announced the proposal to concentrate the training of junior leaders at Harrogate. No final decision has been taken on possible future uses for the remaining college at Chepstow (although it is one of several locations being considered for use by the field Army).

It is too early to say what the detailed implications will be for the staff of the establishments affected. Full consultation with the trades unions will take place in the normal way before final decisions are taken.

SCOTLAND

Johnstone North Industrial Improvement Area

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to establish an initiative to develop the Johnstone north industrial improvement area as a magnet for inward investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The question of support for local area initiatives such as the Johnstone north industrial improvement area is essentially a matter for local bodies such as the local enterprise company and local authorities. I understand that the area to which the hon. Member refers is a work improvement area organised by the district council, which has broad powers to support and encourage investment and development. The local enterprise company for the area, Renfrewshire Enterprise, has no proposals to afford the area special status; but it has a range of advice and assistance available for businesses wishing to invest or relocate in the area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government have provided for mine-clearing operations in Cambodia from 1988 to date; and if he will give details of Her Majesty's Government's plans for the years 1992-93 in this respect.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 4 June. In addition to our substantial contribution in terms of both money and men through the United Nations, we gave £60,000 in financial year 1991-92 to the HALO Trust to help its mine survey work in Cambodia on behalf of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees. This year, we have offered to provide a further £150,000 subject to the HALO Trust raising matching funds.

High Technology Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent proposals have been received from the United States Government on the establishment of a multilateral co-operation council to control high technology export involving member countries of the COCOM group and states from the former Warsaw pact.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: COCOM countries have been considering how to respond to the collapse of the Warsaw pact and the break-up of the Soviet Union. In this context the US Government recently proposed the creation of an informal body in which COCOM members could enter into a dialogue with states of the former Warsaw pact on the control of sensitive technologies.

At a high level meeting of COCOM on 1 June, member countries decided to invite those COCOM-proscribed destinations which have embarked on political reform to join them in an informal COCOM co-operation forum on export controls. The primary objective of the forum will be to encourage countries to implement effective export controls, with a view to providing them with significantly wider access to COCOM-controlled goods and technology.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) Official Report, 14 May, columns 191-92, if he will give details of each of the 29 items of equipment connected to the nuclear weapons programme in Iraq which are in the possession of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will list the origin of each item of such equipment known to date by the Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 29 items referred to in my answer to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 14 May at columns 191-92 relate to the weaponisation part of the Iraqi nuclear programme.

Consolidated details of these are contained in the report of the International Atomic Energy Authority's 11th inspection which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he will make to the Liechtenstein Government to facilitate the work of the investigators of the Maxwell companies' collapse in seeking to identify the extent and location of relevant funds deposited in Liechtenstein banks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Investigations into the collapse of companies connected with the late Robert Maxwell are under way. I have no plans to make representations to the Government of Liechtenstein on this matter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Community

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what method he proposes to use to maximise policy co-ordination in reviewing policy and area boundaries and designation for regional policy purposes between Her Majesty's Government and the Commission of the European Communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The appropriate degree of co-ordination could best be assured if, in future, areas eligible for the European regional development fund were selected by the member states, subject to certain limits and conditions laid down in Council regulations.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations he has had with the Commissioner for Regional Policy of the European Commission concerning the (a) criteria, (b) time scale and (c) completion date of the redrawing of the assisted area map of the United Kingdom; and what weight is proposed to be given to current defence dependency in designation as an assisted area.

Mr. Sainsbury: No consultation has taken place with the Commissioner for Regional Policy of the European Commission specifically about the review of the assisted areas map. In the review of the map the problems and needs of all areas, including areas with heavy dependence on a particular sector, will be carefully considered.

Genetic Information (Patenting)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy towards proposals for the patenting of life forms and genetic information.

Mr. Leigh: Under our current legislation, inventions relating to life forms and genetic information are, in general, patentable provided that they satisfy the normal requirements—that they are novel, not obvious and industrially applicable. Plant and animal varieties are, however, specifically excluded from patentability. The Government have no plans to change the legislation.

Company Legislation

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to revise the current companies legislation to (a) ensure the granting of speaking rights to proxies and (b) require each major company to include on its board of directors an individual whose responsibilities specifically cover equal opportunities.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: There are no proposals to extend the speaking rights of proxies beyond the present ones contained in the Companies Act 1985. In the case of a private company a proxy has under section 372 of the Companies Act 1985 the same right as a member to speak at a meeting; a public company can if it wishes to grant speaking rights to proxies through its articles of association; nor is there any intention to require companies to have a director whose responsibilities specifically cover equal opportunities, as the directors of the company all share responsibility for ensuring that the company complies with its statutory obligations on equal opportunities as well as on the other legislative requirements that apply to it. There is nothing to stop a company allocating specific responsibility for equal opportunities to a particular director on a voluntary basis.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of regional financial assistance has been made available to each intermediate and development area in each year since the last revision of the assisted areas map in 1984.

Mr. Sainsbury: Expenditure on regional financial assistance in the standard regions of Great Britain broken down into development areas and intermediate areas is set out in the following table. The schemes covered in the table are regional development grants, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants. A more detailed breakdown by assisted area is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of regional financial assistance was made available to each of the standard United Kingdom regions in each year since 1978-79, (a) at net prices and (b) at 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on regional financial assistance from 1978-79 at current prices and at 1978-79 prices is set out in the tables. The expenditure is gross of recoveries. Regional information on a net basis is not readily available.

Notes:

[1]All figures are gross and include payments to Nationalised Industries.

[2]Includes some minor expenditure in West Midlands in respect of Oswestry TTWA which ceased to be an Assisted Area in 1982-83.

[3]Certain TTWAs in the West Midlands were designated as Assisted Areas on 29 November 1984.

[4]Expenditure on a 1978-79 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.

[5]Includes expenditure in Cumbria, otherwise shown within the totals for Northern Region.

The items included in the expenditure are Regional Development Grants, Regional Selective Assistance and Regional Enterprise Grants; expenditure on Land and Factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

Northern Ireland has a different range of financial incentives available and the items included are Industrial Development Board grants and loans, expenditure on land and factories, Standard Capital Grants and Local Enterprise Development Unit grants and loans.

Milford Docks Company

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline (i) the options available to him and (ii) the action he intends to take following the report of inspectors appointed by him to investigate the Milford Docks Company under section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The report of the Milford inspectors was published on 16 January 1992 thereby putting the inspectors' findings into the public domain. Copies have been provided to the Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Law Society and the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors for them to consider the reported conduct of their members. After considering legal advice it is not proposed to institute proceedings under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

CAMBRIDGE REFERENCE LIBRARY

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 208

SESSION 1992–93

18th May—5th June 1992

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
